REGRETS ON ALL SIDES.

Charles D. Stevenson of North Lex-L. & B. St. R'y. Co., Rembered by Fellow Employees.

A pleasant surprise was given Wednesday evening, at the waiting room at the Arlington Heights terminus of the Lexington & Boston Street railway, to Charles D. Stevenson, the assistant superintendent of the road since its incep-

Mr. Stevenson has resigned his position here to accept the management of a road in the western part of the state and his departure is much regretted by his fellow railroad men, also by a large circle of friends whose acquaintance he has made since coming to Lexington.

Employes of the road and personal friends to the number of over 100 were gathered on the occasion. The esteem in which the retiring official is held was attested by the presentation to him of handsome gold watch and chain as gift from the employes of the road and a few personal friends. On behalf of the young women in the office of the of the young women in the office of the road, Mr. Stevenson was presented with a set of gold sleeve buttons, and also a handsome umbrella from personal friends. The watch and chain were presented by Inspector Henry Brown in a well chosen address which was subscribed to by the donors.

The address was as follows: "It is with sincere regret we learn that you have severed your relations with the Lexington & Boston Street Rallway company. It is with pleasure that we avail ourselves of this opportunity to give, expression to our regard for you. This feelings of regard born of kindly intercourse, one with another. As an official you have treated us with dignity and justice.

have treated us with dignity and justice.

"In our social relations you have ever been courteous and full of good cheer. In the trying scenes of life your thoughtfulness and sympathy have ever been manifest, and in fact under all the varying circumstances of railroad life, you have proved yourself our true friend, indeed. Realizing all this we desire to express in this way our high appreciation of, and regard for, you. Therefore, in behalf of the employes of the Lexington & Boston Street Railway company, I present to you this gift.

"We grieve at your departure. We rejoice at your promotion. May the sun of prosperity shine upon you. May your life efforts be crowned with success and as the years roll by and new friends fill the places of old ones, may you still retain a part in your affections for these, your friends, the employes of the Lexington & Boston Street Railway company."

Mr. Stevenson made a feeling response.

ington & Boston Street Railway company."

Mr. Stevenson made a feeling response, dwelling on the friendship always existing between himself and the employes, and at his regret in being obliged to leave them.

Supt. William H. Greene followed. O. G. Seeley, of Lexington, the well known druggist, spoke of the high regard of the citizens for Mr. Stevenson. M. J. M. Donald, the oldest employee on the road, and who was motor-man on the first car ever started on the L. & B, road, spoke for his fellow-motormen. Ed Small spoke for the conductors, and Peter Reycroft for the road department. A collation was served, after which a pleasant social hour was passed, vocal and instrumental numbers being given by different members of the company.

The grand march was a brilliant feature, and was led by the floor marshal, Grand Knight C. S. Ryan, with Mrs. Ryan. Next in line was the floor director, Deputy Grand Knight Dennis F. Hinchey, with Miss Katie Prendergast, of Arlington, and they were followed by about 100 couples.

The assistant floor directors were Dennis H. Collins and Michael J. Manley. The alds were Joseph P. Ryan, Edward H. Mara, William J. Harrington, Charles O'Nell, John T. Hinchey, James A. Hurley, Daniel E. Collins, Chas. W. O'Dowd, Michael A. Pero, Frank Maguire, Peter O'Connor and Fred J. Spencer.

THE RUMMAGE SALE.

THE RUMMAGE SALE.

The rammage sale was the attraction of Lexington, Thursday. All day Cary hall was crowded to the very door, while the streets were alive with people carting off truck of all kinds—pictures, boots, hats, shirtwaists, etc.—and by the way, if you happen to see any of your discarded wearing apparel floating about town, "Sh! Say nothing at all." But compared with other sales of the kind, this one was an especially attractive one, almost everything being useful. Things disappeared rapidly, and by six o'clock almost the entire stock was cleared out. Those articles which still remained were auctioned off in the evening by A. S. Mitchell. They all brought very good prices with the exception of a few stray switches, which no one had the courage to bid upon. Among the things auctioned off was the poster drawn by Roger Greeley, which was sold to Harry Putnam for the small sum of $2.10. Everything was closed out during the evening, and the extent of the profits may be $150.

A public meeting for the exposition of the principles and methods of the Inde-pendent Order of Good Templars will be held in Knights of Columbus hall, Arlington, Wednesday evening.

SWAN GUILTY.

ington Who Severs Connection With Arlington Man Admits His Electrics Meet on Single Track B. Delmont Locke Is No Longer Crime in Court.

> Asks Leave to Retract Plea of Not Guilty-Speaks in Weak Voice and Appears Feeble.

Roland A. Swan, formerly asisstant town clerk of Arlington, was brought into the superior court at East Cambridge yesterday, and retracted his plea of not guilty. He then pleaded guilty to the whole indictment brought against him for various larcenies of town funds. The idictment contains 280 counts. The proceedings in the court room were very brief. Swan was brought in about 10.30 a.m. and was seated in the dock. He appeared eager to have the ordeal through as quickly as possible. When Clerk Ambrose asked the usual question whether he wished to retract his former plea, Swan's voice was scarcely audible, and he nodded his head at the same time.

The formality of reading the 280 counts in the indictment was dispensed with evidently to the prisoner's relief, and Clerk Ambrose merely asked him to plead to the entire indictment, which he did with a low "guilty."

Immediately Swan was removed from the dock and was taken to the jail again. He presented a feeble appearance and used a cane for support while in the courtroom. He will be sentenced Wednesday.

man Sustains Injuries-Fog Hides Approaching Cars-Brakes of No

A head-on collision of two electric cars on the Tuft's college and Medford Hillside branch of the Boston Elevated Street Railway company, Wednesday morning, on Medford street, Arlington, near the Medford line cost one man a foot and perhaps his life. The cars were running along on the single track and wing to the dense fog neither motorman was able to see the approaching car. Nicholas Barry, of 109 Third street, East Cambridge, who was driving the Arlington bound car, was the man seriusly injured.

The crash came at about ten minutes before seven, when the car bound for Arlington was speeding along on the single track within a few yards of the tle was present and he advised the ac-

HAS RESIGNED.

Town Clerk of Arlington.

Glad to Have Ordeal Over With and Motorman Loses a Foot, and Market- Harvey S. Sears Appointed in His Stead-Selectmen Refuse to Accept Mr. Locke's Resignations as Treasurer and Collector of Taxes.

> B. Delmont Locke, of Arlington, has esigned as town clerk which position he has held for nearly 28 years. The resignation was accepted Monday evening and Harvey S. Sears was appointed by the Arlington selectmen to serve in that capacity until the annual town meeting in March, Mr. Locke also tendered his resignation as town treasurer and as collector of taxes, but this was not accepted owing to the muddled condition of the town's financial affairs,

> The resignation had been in the hands of the selectmen since Saturday and a special meeting of the board was called immediately to discuss the matter. At the meeting Town Counsel W. H. H. Tutswitch. The ear for Sullivan square had left the transfer station in the center at the usual time and had but a few passengers. It evidently expected the other car would be waiting below the strip of single track and was hurrying along to give it room. Whichever car really had the right of way may be left for the proper authorities to decide, but certain it is that neither motorman had any doubt but that he was running according to the rule. There is a slight deciline at the point where the collision took place, the highest point being towards Arilington Centre. When the cars were but a few feet from each other the two motormen at almost the same moment saw the oncoming car, and both instantly applied the brakes. For some reason, probably because of the frosty condition of the tracks, the brakes seemed to have but little or no effect on the speed of the cars, for they approached each other with but a slightly slackened pace and in another instant they were together.

The impact of the two cars was such that the entire front of the outward-bound car was torn away and Barry was hurled in the debris. He was extricated as soon as possible and was found to be badly hurt. He sustained severe scalp wounds, his left leg was injured, his foot crushed and he also suffered internal injuries. Drs. Stickney and Hooker, of Arlington, were quickly summoned and the injured man was removed to the police station, and later taken to the Massachusetts General hospital. It was found necessary to amputate the injured foot which was done soon after the arrival.

Conductor Michael Savage, who was on the car with Barry, said, after it was on the cushioned seat. Then he threw himself flat upon it, and in this way escaped much of the shock and possible severe injuries.

The other car was handled by Conductor J. J. O'Connell and Motorman W. H. Gorman. The latter, after applying the brake as hard as he could, jumped just in time to avoid being Jammed in the collision. The car which they were on was also smashed in the front end, the fender was broken, the top of the car was partly torn away and glass windows in the end of the car were knocked into bits. No one was injured on this car although all were thrown forward by the collision, and were somewhat shaken up. On the Arlington bound car there were but two or three passengers, all of whom escaped injury except Franklin M. Upham, a brother of E. E. Upham, the Arlington provision dealer. Mr. Upham was reading a paper in the rear end of the car when he heard a scream, and then found himself tumbling over and over on the floor towards the forward end. He did not stop until he reached the front door which was hanging by a corner, and when Mr. Upham picked himself up he found he was not seriously injured, although he had sustained a deep cut on his nose from the broken glass, and had bruises on his left shoulder and side. He hurried out at the rear end and assisted the others in extricating the unfortunate motorman from the debris on the front platform. Mr. Upham says that evidently the front door giving way saved the motorman from instant death, but as it was the door, by breaking in, formed a sort of cover for the motorman as he lay penned in with his left leg securely held by the bits of wood and iron. The ready hands quickly removed the obstructions and pulled Barry out upon the ground. He bled profusely and it was feared he would die before help came, but the fears were found to be groundless.

From interviews with several men who were on the spot almost as soon as the cars met, it would appear that the fog was so dense as to absolutely hide any object more than 100 feet away, and the rails were also declared to be very slipnery.

James H. Bailey, Jr., of Arlington Heights, has now one of the finest and best equipped law offices in Boston. He, together with Wilfred Bolster, Mayor David T. Dickinson, of Cambridge, George Royal Pulsifer and Alexander Dickinson, have removed to rooms 413 and 417 Barristers' hall at No. 25 Pemberton square. tion taken. The meeting was a lengthy one and the selectmen were in session until nearly midnight. The whole situation relative to the finances of the town was debated in its several passes, and the final preparations for the resignations for treasurer and collector for the present at least, for several reasons. The board did not believe it best to take any step which might give up any of the rights the town may have relative to the financial muddle, and while it is not asserted the acceptance of the resignation would do this, the plan taken was believed to be the wisest. Again, until the affairs have in some way been straightened out, it was thought best to keep Mr. Locke in the office, nominally, at least, even though he may not be able to attend to any of the business personally owing to his health. Then, also, an appointed or an elected treasurer and collector would much prefer to start out with the books in perfect shape, even though made so by action on the part of the town. For all of these reasons and perhaps for others of minor importance the action taken was believed to be the proper one at the present time.

The decision of the board marks only one more chapter in the famous Swan case which has been prominently before the public during the past six months. Roland A. Swan has been in the East Cambridge jail since May 1 last, charged with the embezglement of $30,000 or more from the town of Arlington while he was assistant to Mr. Locke.

Since the affair Mr. Locke, who is 75 years of age, has failed rapidly, and for the last few weeks he has been critically ill at his home. Last Saturday, when some improvement was shown in his condition, James P. Parmenter, his counsel, was called in, and in the presence of several witnesses Mr. Locke signed a paper resigning all offices held by him under the town.

In reality he did not sign the document, being unable to use the pen handed him except to make his mark. Inlis was not surprising for he has hardly seen able to sign his name for several weeks, and when he

These two were reserved for special mention, and the pen pusher made an inadvertent omission. Charles S. In no less degree was the singing of John C. Fowler appreciated, Mr. Fowler was a member of the original Fiske Jubilee Singers company, and his baritone selections were of the very best. ### A CURIOUS LEGAL MUDDLE.

Massachusetts boasts, sometimes, of its judiciary system, but it is not surprising that other states are laughing at us, just now, on account of the conflicting decisions as to what constitutes drunkenness. We cannot be said to have any "system" when different judges of the same court are as far apart as the poles on a simple question. Two men, who have done the same thing, come before different judges, and one is sent to prison while the other is acquitted. And the judges make addresses giving their views of the law, not as a part of their decisions, but for the benefit of the newspaper readers. There seems to be po remedy for this curious condition of affairs. Luckily we don't have an elective judiciary. If we did, the man who was most lenient would win.

FOR RECIPROCAL TRADE.

The friends of reciprocity are active, everywhere, and there is likely to be very hearty support for the national policy outlined by President McKinley. The Citizens' Trade association, of Cambridge, is at work in behalf of the plan, and a canvasser has secured a good number of signatures of Cambridge citizens to a petition to be sent to Congressman McCall.

A QUARTER OF A CENTURY.

Our congratulations to Mr. Hayden The Somerville Journal is 25 years old, and his success in developing it and making a good newspaper has been very great. May it live and prosper all the rest of the century, and may Mr. Hayden continue to reap from it the rewards he deserves.

Judge Dewey ruled, recently, that if a man bought a bit of food with "a drink" on Sunday the seller didn't violate the law, though the purchase and sale of a sandwich were a fake. A Suffolk county jury convicted a man, last week, of what Judge Dewey said was no offence, and the supreme court will decide what the law is.

The Boston courts should be compelled to publish a schedule of the sittings of their various judges, with their opinions regarding legal (or illegal) drunkenness. Then those who go on sprees could know when Judge Dewey would be on the bench, and would avoid the risk of coming up before Judge Burke.

The Michigan supreme court decides that a person who is injured by defects in a sidewalk upon which he is riding collect damages. Massachusetts doesn't permit him to recover damages for injuries due to defective streets and roads. Michigan goes too far and Massachusetts not far enough.

And now it is authoritatively announced that water is made pure by freezing. Soon we shall have a society

AUTOMATIC TELEPHONE.

AUTOMATIC TELEPHONE.

The blacksmith show of W. F. Shean, of Belmont, is the first place in the Boston district of the New England Telephone Co., to have an automatic telephone. The apparatus is an ingenious device whereby one may talk anywhere within the Boston district by simply dropping a nickel in the slot. These telephones are to be placed anywhere upon request, but it is necessary that there e at least 50 calls a month if in a busiss house or shop, or 40 calls if in a wate residence, it may be used by anyone, but for each call whether to Boston or other place, a nickel is required. The party desiring to telephone must ring up the central operator, ask for the party desired, and then if that party is located, the nickel is placed in the slot which rings a bell and the central operator makes the connection. Persons having an instrument of this kind in their house or place of business can talk to Boston for half the regular rate, but this is equalized because it costs as much to talk within the limits of the local exchange. A similar telephone is to be placed in the store of the Arlington News Co., for the use of W. H. Pattee and others, who wish to drop the nickel. Several others will be soon installed in Arlington, Lexington and Belmont.

THE FAREWELL WORD.

Simple Talk Better than Fourth of July Orations.

Whiteface, N. H., Oct. 23, 1901.

Dear Enterprise: We must tell you, now that we are on the point of our leave-taking of these delectable mountains, how much we have enjoyed our letter-writing for your columns during the season here. In the first place we have had your readers right by our side and face to face in our familiar take. the season here. In the first place we have had your readers right by our side and face to face in our familiar talks with them. And then we have been made to believe that the Enterprise has been an attentive listener to what we have had to say, and this fact, if it be a fact, has been the most interesting feature to us of our work. It is always an inspiration to talk when you have the individual attention of the listener. Well, talking is an art whenever it conforms to nature. To say things in a simple natural way is one of the "silvest gifts. Letter-writing uniformly gives one the right, not to preach and write learned essays in a cold, formal way, but to simply talk, and to talk is the only way to successfully get at your audience. We have come to believe that all public discourse, whether from the platform or through the pen, is partially at least a failure, that does not have about it and in it the conversational way of expressing itself. John Burroughs gets near to his readers simply because he talks to them, and so does Henry Van Dyke as seen in his "Fisherman's Luck" and in "Little Rivers." Everybody reads Thoreau with delight because he is entirely conversational in what he has to say. Who is not charmed with the letters of Cecilia Thaxter, written in so simple and delightful a way? The singularly drawing feature of Bayard Taylor's public speaking was found in the fact that he always talked to his audience. public speaking was found in the fact that he always talked to his audience. Now, why can't the minister, the law-yer, and the newspaper man adopt this natural and better method of expression? Why must the most of us be forever deyer, and the newspaper man adopt this natural and better method of expression? Why must the most of us be forever declaiming or preaching in sepulchral tones? A simple talk is far more effective than the spread-eagle Fourth-of-July oration. That minister who says the simplest things in the simplest way to his hearers will never want for an audience, and that journalist who has something to say and will say it as he would tell it, will have his paper read. What we have to do, is to get down from our stilts and walk the solid earth. Yes, letter-writing is the conversational way of expressing one's self. When we say "Dear Enterprise," we let loose of all rhetoric, and happily forget all the formal rules of epistolary correspondence. You see, that in such correspondence we get so near to the friend addressed, that we may pour our own life into that of the friend and that we may receive his own life into that of ours. The Apostle Paul did much of his most effective preaching through the medium of letter writing. "Behold," he says, "what a long letter I have written unto you." And once more, he writes, "Ye are our epistle written in our hearts." And then the Master, how frequently he speaks unto the multitude! "And he spoke unto them in parables." And then referring to Paul again with what interest one reads his letters to Timothy! "Greatly desiring to see thee being mindful of thy tears, that I may be filled with joy." And so we repeat that our weekly letters to the Enterprise from the heights, have given us a peculiar pleasure in our journalistic work. In that our weekly letters to the Enterprise from the heights, have given us a peculiar pleasure in our journalistic work. In spite of our 125 miles from the readers of the Enterprise we have felt ourselves all the while within hand's reach of them, and this because we have been talking to them. We are determined to keep up our talk when we find ourselves home again at our desk in the Enterprise office. So please give us an attentive ear. Here is our good-bve to the mountains, and our right hand and greeting to the readers of the Enterprise.

OLD PAPERS FOUND.

Postmaster L. A. Saville, of Lexington, for many, years town clerk, recently discovered among some papers a statement of the amounts of money gramted to defray the expenses of the town for 1864-65. The document, which is signed by A. W. Bryant, town clerk, calls for $19.30. Of this amount $1200 was for the families of volunteers, and $3137 to be returned to the subscribers to the fund used to keep the town's volunteer quota full. This left less than $13,000 for the ordinary tunning expenses of the town, which makes a meagre comparison with the $35,000 voted at the town meeting of 1901. In 1864 the town appropriated for schools, $4200; 1901, $21,300; highways, 1864, $1600; 1901, $5800. Such usual expenses as police, street lights, water works and variety of the such covered among some papers a statement of the amounts of money gramted to defray the expenses of the town for 1864-65. The document, which is signed by A. W. Bryant, town clerk, calls for $19.300; of the family superfluous and the subscribers to the fund used to keep the town's volunteers and $2137 to be returned to the subscribers to the fund used to keep the town's volunteers and $2137 to be returned to the subscribers to the fund used to keep the town's volunteers and $2137 to be returned to volunteers, and $2137 to be returned to the subscribers to the fund used to keep the town's volunteers and $2137 to be returned to volunteers, and $2137 to be returned to volunteers and $2137 to be returned to volunteers and $2137 to be returned to volunteers and $2137 to lice, street lights, water works and valice, street lights, water works and various other large expenses did not appear at all in 1864. The population of the town in 1865 was 2210; in 1900, 3831, In the 35 years the population considerably less than doubled, yet the expenses are nearly eight times as much. This does not take into account $10.000 for the extension of the water works, and $57.500 for a new high school building, voted since the annual meeting of 1901.

Editor Enterprise: In your last week's issue that was a delightful column on the busy life of our much esteemed townsman, Mr. Joshua G. Dodge, and his friends all greatly enjoyed its reading. The picture accompanying the story so well told of Mr. Dodge, is an admirable one, representing Mr. Dodge as he now is, with his eighty-eight years resting so lightly upon him, and reflecting much credit on the artists, Marshall and Grant. Mr. Dodge has all that ease and elegance of manner which were so characteristic of the gentlemen of the olden time, and he is now one of the most delightful men to meet. So much do we prize the well written story of his life, and the attractive face accompanying it, that we already have the story and picture in our scrap-book. Oct. 24, 1901.

A WORTHY SUCCESSOR.

"Something New Under The Sun."

All doctors have tried to cure CA-TARRH by the use of powders, acid gases, inhalers and drugs in paste form. Their powders dry up the mucous membranes causing them to crack open and bleed. The powerful acids used in the inhalers have entirely eaten away the same membranes that their makers have aimed to cure, while pastes and ointments cannot reach the disease. An old and experienced practitioner who has for many years made a close study and specialty of the treatment of CA-TARRH, has at last perfected a Treatment which when faithfully used, not only relieves at once, but permanently cures CATARRH, by removing the cause, stopping the discharges, and curing all inflammation. It is the only remedy known to science that actually reaches the afflicted parts. This wonder, ful remedy is known as "SNUFFLES the GUARANTEED CATARRH CURE" doctors have tried to cure CAful remedy is known as "SNUFFLES the GUARANTEED CATARRH CURE" and is sold at the extremely low price of One Dollar, each package containing internal and external medicine sufficient n Ingenious Treatment by Which Drunkards are Being Cured Daily in Spite of Themselves.

No Noxious Doses. No Weakening of the Nerves. A Pleasant and Positive Cure for the Liquor Habit.

It is now generally known and understood that Drunkenness is a disease and not weakness. A body filled with poison, and nerves completely shattered by periodical or constant use of intoxicating liquors, requires an antidote capable of neutralizing and eradicating this poison, and destroying the craving for intoxicants. Sufferers may now cure themcants. Sufferers may now selves at home without publicity or loss of time from business by this wonderful "HOME GOLD CURE" which has been perfected after many years of close study and treatment of inebriates. The faithful use according to directions of this wonderful discovery is positively guaranteed to cure the most obstinate guaranteed to cure the most obstinate case, no matter how hard a drinker. Our records show the marvelous transformation of thousands of Drunkards into sober, industrious and upright men. WIVES CURE YOUR HUSBANDS!! CHILDREN CURE YOUR FATHERS!!

This remedy is in no sense a nostrum but a specific for this disease only, and is so skilifully devised and prepared that it is thoroughly soluble and pleasant to the taste, so that it can be given in a cup of tea or coffee without the know-ledge of the person taking it. Thousands of Drunkards have cured themselves with this priceless remedy, and as many more have been cured and made tem-perate men by having the "CURE" administered by loving friends and rela-tives without their knowledge in coffee or tea, and believe today that they disor tea, and believe today that they discontinued of their own free will. DO NOT WAIT. Do not be deluded by apparent and misleading "improvement." Drive out the disease at once and for all time. The "HOME GOLD CURE" is sold at the extremely low price of One Dollar, thus placing within reach of everybody a treatment more effectual than others costing $25 and $50. Full directions accompany each package. Special Edvice by skilled physicians when requested without extra charge. Sent prepaid to any part of the world on receipt of One Dollar, Address Dept. B 680 EDWIN B. GILES & COMPANY, 2330 and 2332 Market Street, Philadelphia, All correspondence strictly confidential.

HONOR TO ROOSEVELT.

No Color Line, No Sectional Prejudice, Individual Merit the Only Stand-

It seems to be an impossibility for any humanly endowed being so to act that all portions of our country shall be pac-ified, all sections united, all sects harined all sections united, all sects harmonious. Lincoln tried to secure this condition, and he fell by the hands of a representative of the people whom he was trying to befriend. McKinley followed in the same path, and met the same fate, and now political space is resonant with the mutterings of the gathering thunders, voicing the problem, is Roosevelt to swell the list of martyrs to the cause of unity?

to the cause of unity?

President Rooseveit, owing no political debts, having no friess to reward, no enemies to punish, an American in every drop of his blood, a patriot in every throb of his heart, and honest to the core, succeeded his loved predecessor at a crisis in our political life. The rancor of the strife against the spirit of secession and dominion had not entirely died out, and we are renewed by the same spirit in another form—racial antagonism,—a spirit whose magnitude same spirit in another form—racial antagonism,—a spirit whose magnitude cannot be estimated by any temptations, direct or approximate. It needs no mountaneous, political acumen, or gigantic mental sagacity to see this pending condition, indicated in every negro lynching and voiced in the howling mobs which constitute them. This is significant in the fact that such deadly horrors have only found enactment in states wherein slavery once had sovereign sway cant in the fact that such deadiy horrors have only found enactment in states wherein slavery once had sovereign sway and wherein its spirit still lingers, like a haunting, unquiet spirit which will not rest in the grave to which, by the decree of events, it has been consigned. This story is written on the face of each of these hideous incidents and glares from each line of the records. The white owners of slavery days will not recognize the manhood of the man whom once they bought and sold as cattle.

President Roosevelt, strong in his love of country, devoted to her truth and honor, and pledged to purity in executive administration, knowing no sectional divisions, owning no racial distinctions, and scorning mere partisan restrictions, looked to the south and from the ranks of the men who have ever been arrayed against the principles to which he is devoted, selected one to fill an honorable legal position, one high in honor and significance. Straightway all through the south, men threw their hats high in air and cheered the promised new dispensation and eulogized the "Daniel come to south, men threw their hats high in air and cheered the promised new dispensation and eulogized the "Daniel come to judgment." The press waxed eloquent, filling column after column in sounding the praises of the ruler who dared to defy all political traditions, having the courage of his convictions. At one bound he mounted to the pinnacle of greatness and was the incarnation of sublimated intelligence. But when, in pursuance of this independence of thought and action, this independence of thought and action, he invited to his table as a man and citizen of our free country, the light of the sun was darkened, the day departed and night shut out the glorious brightness. "How are the mighty fallen!" Beand night shut out the glorious brightness. "How are the mighty fallen!" Because he selected from among Alabama Democrats a high official, he was wise, he was just, he was great! But because he dared to ignore the still active antagonism of the old slave power and give his hand to a man, guilty only of a black face, he has forfeited all claims to respect, all rights to the consideration of themselves and men of their color and belief. One who keeps in touch with the march of events and mindful of what is transpiring, must needs be impressed with one single conclusion, namely, "How vast is that inconsistency which, in America, whose boast is freedom and equality, condemns as service and unfit ever for citizenship a race which has in many ways and at various times asserted its right to equal respect, which has in many ways and at various times asserted its right to equal respect, while, through the rancor of political animosity, it raises to an honorable elevation a race vastly inferior in every element that constitutes social worth." In other words, the negro of America, with the well improved advantages he has enjoyed of mingling with his brethren of the Caucasian race, is unfit to rank as a self-ruler, while for the Malay of the Philippines, goes up the howl from the south and all sympathizers, that from the south and all sympathizers, that these barbarians from time immemorial, with faces quite as black and customs yet blacker, should be permitted to form a government to be executed by themselves.

every American who loves his country and reverences justice, with heart, voice and arm, if need be, do all in his power to sustain the president who sees no distinctions of sect, class, creed or color, recognizing only manhood and the worth which is its exemplar, and certainly a race which less plar, and certainly a race which less than forty years ago were a peculiar anomaly ranked as "cattle," but which during that period has made such ac-vance in social, moral, educational and political ethics, giving mankind a Douglass, a Washington and scores of other lass, a Washington and scores of other able representatives, is well worthy respect. And this no just man will withhold, no loyal citizen deny.

As for myself, I have only this to say of the colored race and I demand that all loyal men shall fall in line with me: The men, who, when the country was in peril, and, to quote the significant words of Secretary Seward, "stretched forth her arms to Ethiopia," sprang into line and proved their manhood on many bloody fields, shall ever receive from me, the recognition they deserve. He, whether black or white, who stood shoulder to shoulder with me in the battle line, is today, as then, my friend and entitled to my respect. I recall the "slaughter pen" at Port Hudson, where the colored regimy respect. I recall the "slaughter pen at Port Hudson, where the colored regiments, at their end of the battle line, did such magnificent fighting that it made the resistance at our end easier to face. They left nearly one-half their number dead on the enemy's works, a condition that was paralleled at East. condition that was paralleled at Fort Felham, at Fort Fisher, at Fort Wagner and elsewhere. But, of course, it is not to be expected that the men they fought to be expected that the men they fought in '62. '63 and '64 will admire them for it today. I have, when speaking of the valor of the colored troops during the Civil war, been met with the sneerling response. 'Oh, that was frenzy!' well, it was frenzy in the right direction, for it might have been 'panic,' similar to that shown by many white-faced soldiers on several occasions now known to history. This logic of the southern Democrat, endorsed by the Democracy of all times, which under the constitution, during the old regime, made a slave three-fifths of a voter on election day and mere cattle all the rest of the year, is finding voice in the proscription of today and must be stamped out finally and entirely before Grant's prayer, "Let us have peace," can be answered and realized. Manhood, which is the only true title to citizenship, is of no one shade of color, or grade of sect, and he is no honorable man who would withhold it from one who deserves it. The southern journals who are, "Tray, Blanche and Sweetheart, everyone." howling and barking at Roosevelt's traits, declaring "this is a white man's country!" are forgetful of facts, past and present, or that expression might be modified. For, as a matter of fact, this is a red man's country, for from the red man we took it by force of numbers, certainly not by right, and should go very slowly in putting up any such claim, lest some individual with a good memory and an uncompromising knowledge of history should make the pertinent inquiry, "How do you know?" And it is but poor morality to accept the aid of a class when in need, and after the danger is past, repudiate and insult them. In this day of prosperity we should remember the timely aid of the colored soldiers who dared and died like heroes, and give him the same meed of praise and honor, which is his due as a man, irrespective of color or social condition, No color line, no sectional prejudice, no division of creed, or sect, but only merit and loyalty, in our judgment of men. TESTED IN A RIGID MANNER.

Chronometers of Ships Must Be Beyoud Possibility of Error. There is a popular belief that chronom eters, those delicate pieces of mechanism which enable the mariner to tell to a nicety where he is upon the ocean, are made only in England. One will be told even in Maiden lane, New York, that England is chronometer maker for the world. This was true at one time, but now, according to shipmasters, America turns out excellent chronometers.

Many of the instruments in use in the United States are of American make. These chronometers are purchased on The delicate instrument is subto extremes of temperature by jected means of which its variations are ascertained. No instrument leaves the maker's hands until it has been thoroughly tested or before it is three years old. In this period there is ample opportunity for developing its peculiarities. When it is understood that an error of four seconds on the part of the chronometer will put a skipper a mile out of his course, the necessity of the most careful and thorough test is apparent.

Even when an instrument has been tested to the satisfaction of the experts and has been finally adjusted only a skilled man can be allowed to carry it from the workshop to the ship. One firm alone has a dozen of these carriers constantly employed. They are not, of course, dealing all the time in new chronometers; there are from 400 to 500 always in stock from ships arriving in this port from all parts of the world. As soon as a ship comes into port its chronometer is usually sent ashore for rating-that is to say, it is carefully observed until the ship is ready to sail, when the variation is reported to the captain, who can make his calculations accordingly.

The chronometers of the transatlantic liners are sent ashore for rating every time they come into port. The greatest care is taken of chronometers on board ship, and on all first class ships there are usually three, one being for deck observation. The most perfect one of the lot is usually placed in a dry but well ventilated apartment amidships, where it is firmly screwed down, and, should there be fear of dampness, wrapped in a heavy woolen blanket. On the government vessels the chronometer is placed in a case lined and padded with curled hair, which keeps it from being marred. The smallspeck of rust on the balance spring might cause a chronometer to lose its accuracy. A first class chronometer costs $250, and one of the same grade capable of telegraphing its own time sells at $450. -New York Post.

Bandages and Red Tape.

During the South African war Rudyard Kipling discovered at Cape Town a hospital without bandages and in desperate need of them. This, too, was in a city where bandages were for sale in many

He told an acquaintance that he was going to meet that want, and the gentleman at once offered to pay for all the bandages that Mr. Kipling would buy and take to the hospital.

A cart was quickly loaded, and then the author was informed that under army rules the hospital authorities could not receive supplies from a private individual.

"Well," said he, "I will dump the packages on the pavement before the door and then tell them to come out and clear up the litter. Perhaps they can get them into the building in that way without tearing any red tape."

He drove off with the bandages, and the supplies were somehow smuggled into the hospital.

Whatever may be the cause of the au rora borealis its height does not appear to be limited by the atmosphere. rays sometimes touch the earth in Scandinavia, coming between the observer and elevated places, but Flogel years ago obtained data showing that a large aurora seen in northern Germany must have had a height of sixty miles and that the tays often rise to 450 miles, their points glowing with red light.

Where They Are Produced and

Where Much Beeswax Goes, Keeping bees is a pleasant and classic occupation, sanctioned by poets in all ages; moreover, and to the practical modern this is far more important, it is a paying business when scientifically conducted. The number of beekeepers in this country is estimated at about 300,000, and they sell annually some 3,000,000 or 4,000,000 pounds of their sweet produce. In every state of the Union they may be found, but Florida, Texas, California, Colorado, New Mexico, Arizona, Michigan, Wisconsin and central and northern New York are the great beekeeping sections. Wherever great quantities of basswood, buckwheat and, of course, clover, are found, there beekeeping means a pretty good income. Some bee farmers have 1,500 to 3,000 colonies under their care and have reduced the business to a pretty exact science.

In Colorado, Arizona and states in the neighborhood of the great desert the honey "crop" is as sure as anything can well be, even the proverbial "death and taxes." Elsewhere the clover crop may be ruined by rain or drought, but there the sun is sure to shine and the canals are sure to irrigate, so that the lack of clover is practically impossible. And it is alfalfa clover, too, of which four crops are certain every year. Under these conditions it is not surprising to find in Arizona and similar states whole counties keeping bees as in other parts of the country people cultivate farms. It is, in fact, the only certain thing in that ill favored land, as the alfalfa clover is the one green thing that can coax a livelihood out of inhospitable soil.

Maeterlinck has written a book about the bee. Perhaps somé philosopher will one day arise to sing the praises of the clover, living where nothing else can grow, and, alone of all "weeds," enriching the soil which gives it life. Arizona folk may not be philosophers, but they are properly grateful to the kindly blossom.

If the story of the clover is somewhat romantic, that of the beeswax is hardly less so. Several hundred thousand pounds of beeswax are produced every year, and prices are steady and conserv ative. Much of it goes into commonplace uses. Shoemakers, dentists, thread manufacturers and the like use much of it and cannot use anything in its place; glassworkers, too, require it for molding purposes, but the interesting part of the beeswax business comes when it is exported to Russia. The Greek church uses nothing but pure beeswax for its candles. This, apparently, is an ecclesiastical law. So beeswax is exported in enormous quantities to burn in Russian churches. When the price is low, all that can be procured is bought up for exportation. It is distinctly an interesting career, this of the beeswax, beginning with the irrigation of the desert and ending as the candles flicker before an eastern shrine .- New York Tribune.

PATTI'S GIFT.

Hidden In a Basket of Flowers She Found a Tiny Dog.

During one of the most admirable performances that Donizetti's opera ever received in this country an incident occurred that lent momentous interest to Patti's appearance.

Mme. Diaz, wife of the president of Mexico, had heard of the death of Patti's pet dog Ricci and had sent her another, which was to be presented to the diva in a novel way. The tiny animal was buried in a basket of roses, but an usher discovered it and the manager refused permis-

At the next act, however, Mr. Abbey relented and allowed the usher to convey the gift. The basket in which the dog was hidden was a triumph of floral art, and Mme. Patti, attracted by the beauty His merits often bring a title not to of its design and the gorgeous bloom of its roses, chose to carry it personally off

As she lifted the basket and kissed its flowers the little dog, which was badly frightened by the experience it had had gave a feeble cry. The diva started, looked curiously into the mass of flowers, gave a purely feminine scream of delight, and, running down to the footlights, whis pered gleefully to the audience, "I declare if it isn't a lovely little dog!" No one who has not been at a Patti performance can realize the enthusiastic volume of applause that greeted this announcement. Men jumped up on the chairs and yelled "Brava, brava, Patti!" and women waved their fans and handkerchiefs and cried hysterically. Suddenly Patti dived her curly head into the basket and kissed the dog, whereat a fresh storm of cheers rang through the house. Then she tried to extract the little animal from the flowers, so that she could show him to the audience. But he was tied in securely with ribbons. Whereupon she said in dumb but eloquent pantomime, "I can't get him out." Finally, as the applause showed no signs of abatement, she ran off the stage, gave the dog and his basket to an attendant, came tripping back and whispered, "Home, Sweet Home" to Signor Arditi, and the ballad was sung as only Patti can sing it.

There were tears in her eyes as she finished, and many a man in the auditorium choked down a sob and many a woman wept silently as the pathetic strains of the old song floated in mournful cadence through the auditorium.

Managing a College. As for the actual management of a university's business, it is conducted much like that of a town or city. At the beginning of the year the probable income is estimated. After about 20 per cent is deducted for the expenses of the business department the balance is divided among the different educational departments much in the same way that a board of apportionment does in the case of a city. The modern institution of "higher education" therefore carries on in many instances the business of a real estate office, a collection agency, a bank and a hotel and employs usually a staff of over 100 men.—Harper's Weekly.

How a New York Artist Managed to Secure Suitable Apartments. An agent for a large apartment hotel on West Thirtieth street, near Fifth avenue, was approached the other day in his office by a young man who desired to look at an apartment with a view to leasing it. The agent and the stranger spent an hour or more in the building, and finally the young man agreed that the suit on the very top floor was just what he wanted. The terms were agreed upon, and the prospective tenant was to occupy them on the Monday following.

"I'm an artist," he told the agent, "and that is why I like the top floor. There is plenty of light."

The agent concurred.

"Now, one very important thing I had forgotten," he went on. "There is a young lady who will visit me for several hours every day. She poses for me. Would there be any objection?

"There most certainly would be," answered the agent. "In the first place, I couldn't rent the apartment to you under those conditions, and in the second place I know the other tenants would obje The artist tried to explain that all artists had to have models, but the agent would not consent that the models could pose in the house for which he was re sponsible.

'I'm sorry," said the artist finally, "for I never expect to find a more suitable building for a studio." "I'm sorry too," responded the agent. Then the two men parted.

The next day found the artist again in the agent's office. In company with him was a beautiful young woman who looked radiantly happy, and the redolence of orange blossoms seemed to permeate the room

"Well," began the young man as soon as the agent appeared, "I've fixed it so it will be all right and so the other tenants can't object. This is the young lady I spoke to you about yesterday. She is my model-that is, she was yesterday. Now she's both my model and my wife.
"You see," he continued, "I liked the apartment, and I explained to Miss-I mean Mrs. - that I couldn't lease it while she posed for me.

"We talked of severing our business relations and found that we had loved each other for a long time. We were married at the Little Church Around the Corner last night. If you have any doubts, I have taken pains to bring my marriage certificate with me." And he produced the manuscript.

"Now, if you have any contracts to sign I'm ready."

"But how do you and your wife expect to live in that apartment? We do not allow cooking in it," protested the agent. The astonished bridegroom and the surprised bride looked at each other in amazement. That was a quandary they had not anticipated.

"Well," said the agent, "seeing that you like that apartment so well and that it has brought about your marriage I'll compromise on a chafing dish. But, remember, no gas or oil stoves."

"What do you think about the proposition?" asked the husband.

"Why, it makes no difference to me," she replied. "I'm supposed to pose, not

"Oh, that's so," said the husband, "I agree to do the cooking. Oh, yes, I can use a chafing dish." The lease was then signed .- New York

DRESS HINTS.

Times.

Brown eyes and a brown dress go well

The tan shades are not often suitable for slim figures.

Black satin intensifies the effect of round shoulders. Blue eyed girls should wear blue as often as possible. A small toque is excessive unbecoming above a large round face.

The color of the eyes should determine the choice of the dress and millinery.

A little woman with a thin face may fancy herself in a Gainsborough hat, but she is very wrong-very wrong. Stripes narrower than an inch wide tend to make one look slim; wider than an inch they increase one's breadth. Dull black is the best choice for a fair haired woman, while a brunette must order something brilliantly black if she really wishes to look her best. A blond may wear pure white with advantage, but a brunette nearly always looks better in cream colored fabrics. This ought to be more generally recognized.

Tucks and stripes running downward become the Juno type of woman, but the thin, angular beauty should have the stripes and tucks running around her dress, and she will be surprised to find how much her appearance will be improved.

Antiquity of Fishing. Probably no branch of industry can lay claim to greater antiquity than that of fishing. Its origin would seem to be coeval with the earliest efforts of human ingenuity, for the oldest monuments of antiquity show the fisherman in full possession of the implements of his calling, and even those tribes of savages which have learned neither to keep flocks nor to till the fields are skilled in the fabrication of the hook, the fish spear and the net. The earliest civilization of the east ern Mediterranean was begun with fishing. Sidon, which means "fishery," was originally a fishing village, and its enter prising inhabitants devoted their attention mainly to the collection of a certain kind of mollusks, from which they pre pared the famous Tyrian purple, prized more highly for the richness and variety of its hues than any other dye known to the ancients.

A BIRTHDAY PRESENT

THE GIFT THAT A JUDGE GAVE TO A SORROWING MOTHER.

A Story of the Famous Recorder, Frederick Smyth, Who, on the Criminal Bench of New York City, Was a Terror to the Evildoers.

Few men were better known to New Yorkers than Frederick Smyth, who when recorder was the terror of evildoers, sometimes thought severe in his penalties, but cautious and just in his decisions. The seeming stern side of his nature was turned outward, but friends who knew him well knew also that there was a soft side, and in social life and at his office he loved a joke, could give and take and was always fond of reciting events in which he and John McKeon, his law partner, were actors. "Did you see an old Irish woman waiting as you came in?" he asked one day of the writer. "She is as steady a visitor as an anxious client. There's a story about that woman, and I'll give it to you. It's like a ticket of leave man story, and there's almost a living Bob Brierly up at Sing Sing."

A low knock upon the panel of the open door interrupted the telling, and the woman herself stood meekly before him.
"You here again?" said the recorder, assuming the countenance that gave no hope. "Did you see that bad boy of yours?" "Yis, sh, an' he isn't a bad boy, yer honor, an' he tould me to tell ye so. That's all I came for, yer honor, an' to gin ye this." She thrust a paper into his hand, bowed low and walked silently and slowly to the outer office, turned a second at the door, made an obeisance and disappeared. "Let's read it," said Smyth, turning the paper over. "I suppose it is the same thing he often sends to me." And then he slowly read, "You are good to my mother, and I thank you with my whole heart."

"You see, the boy doesn't make any ap-peal this time. He has made many, and I'm sorry for him. Bad company did it. He was accomplice in a burglary. I think they frightened him. But he was caught, circumstantial evidence strong, and he's doing his term. The mother's poor-has a daughter that earns a little-and a friend of mine gives her money every once in awhile from a little fund I've put up to help her. She'll come here twice a week, and when she goes up to Sing Sing to see the boy I pay her fare. The reports from the prison show the boy is earning time from his sentence. She says it's the boy's birthday on Saturday, and I'll have to make her a present for him, I suppose. Come in Saturday about 2 o'clock, and I'll show it to you. He turned to some law papers, and the interview ended. Prompt on time the writer called at the time named to find the woman waiting in the outer office and Smyth's private room apparently closed. "Come in quick!" sounded from within in answer to a knock authorized by the clerk outside. "She's there, isn't she?" asked Smyth as he shook hands and pushed a chair beside the desk. "I've got the present for her, anyway, so tell her to come in.' Not a word was said as she slowly came forward, and then in his cold, calm voice Smyth placed a chair facing the window and told her to sit down. In a bewildered way she did so.

"Now look right over that park while I'm talking to you and don't turn your head," was spoken in the voice that so many had heard from the design courtroom. "Do you think your boy was guilty?"

"Yes, your honor, but he only kept watch for the others. He knows now what it is to be out wid the boys an' get into throuble. But he's doin' his time, yer honor, an' thryin' fer good conduct, an' he prays every night to find me an' the sisther all right when he comes out. It's a well-l'arnin' it well."

While she was speaking Smyth had opened a closet door next the bookcases and led into the room a sad faced boy and held him back of him, the tall form of the recorder shielding him from view. "I told you not to look from over the park. Now you can look at me," said Smyth, with a voice that was emotionally low. "I've made you a birthday present. Take care of it now you've got it." The scene was more than pathetic. It was a page of real life, and with the reverence of religion the mother clasped the boy and then, falling upon her knees, looked up silently at the recorder. "Don't thank me. The governor pardoned him, and he came down the river this morning. Both of you go to the holy father of your church. Let the boy swear to lead an honest life, and here's something to start it with."

A bank note already rolled into a ball and held in his left hand was given to the woman. Smyth motioned for silence and then, shoving mother and son to the outer door, said slowly: "Don't make a scene. Nobody knows the boy's done time. Keep his hat down close upon his head-th hair'll soon grow out—and go straight to the church. Do you mind me?"

Then as he closed the door and returned to his desk he said: "You see the judge in court and the man in the office I hated to sentence him. You've se something worth remembering today if it wasn't for some of the good till. we can do for others life would be a session, without a recess."-New

HOME AGAIN.

Here we are at home again, and at our desk. To fully appreciate home, one needs to absent himself from it more or less frequently. To see what other people are doing, always begets inspiration. That individual who insists on measuring himself by himself is bound to fall short in both weight and measure. The moment a man steps out into the great big world, he becomes profoundly impressed with the fact that he "doesn't know it all." To get bumped up against your fellow is to get oftentimes pushed to the wall, and just this experience is what many a man needs. He is extremely unfortunate who has become such a stay-at-home, that he is made to believe that his horizon is the end of all terrestrial things. There are others in this world aside from "us and our tolks," and the sooner we come to recognize this fact, the better will it be for To get at your real size, all concerned. push out from home where you will be likely to find some who are at least your equal. It must not be forgotten hat the proposed road is sure to be built at an early day, and it logically follows that some route must be secured. We naturally sympathize with those residing on Pleasant street in the earnest desire that the restful quiet and picturesqueness of Pleasant street shall not be disturbed by the electric-and yet, we recognize that Pleasant street affords the more direct line in reaching Belmont. Still we believe in preserving intact, so far as this can be done without detriment to the public interest, all the more prominent features of attraction either in country or town. But the electric road is bound to materialize, and all will welcome its coming, so we come back to the original query, what line shall it take? Who of the residents of Pleasant street will suggest a possible route? The prominent citizens of the two towns who have their homes on that most delightful street should be the first to suggest and urge the better line to connect the two localities, and this suggestion should be made at an early day. and made in a public way. There can no good result come from any opposition to the proposed electric, for in the very nature of things it must and should Now let Pleasant street speak out in open meeting, and tell this immediate public what line the Arlington and Belmont electric road should take-for it is decreed that the electrical spark is to light and shorten the distance between Arlington and Belmont.

A GLOWING TRIBUTE TO YALE. Rev. S. C. Bushnell, of Arlington, with all the enthusiasm of the bi-centennial upon him, paid his alma mater on Sunday morning a glowing and loving tribdte. Mr. Bushnell took for his text the following words: "If any man would come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me. whosoever would save his life shall lose it, and whosoever shall lose his life for my sake, shall find it." In part, Mr. Bushnell spoke as follows: "I had no idea when I went to the Yale bi-centennial last week that I should talk to you about it this morning. Nor do I propose to speak about the glory of Yale. There are other institutions of learning as dear to you as Yale is to me rejoice in all such institutions. Their value to the country is beyond estimation. But no one could attend such a meeting without having his heart stirred and his mind quickened by what he saw and heard. The coming and going of distinguished guests, to say nothing of the thousands of the alumni, who found time in the midst of their busy lives to gather for three days beneath the shadow of one of the oldest institutions of the land. The giving of honorary degrees to men who had traveled from Japan on the west, and from St. Petersburg and Berlin, Leipsic, Paris, Oxford and Aberdeen on the east; the awarding of these degrees for distinguished and unselfish service of all sorts and kinds, emphasized the thought of the orator, Justice Brewer of the supreme court of the United States, that the supreme object of the college is to train men for public service. . No finer testimony was borne to this fact of public service by Yale men than by President Roosevelt, a graduate of Harvard, who aid amid thunders of applause never worked at a task worth doing that have not found myself shoulder to shoulder with sons of Yale. I have never yet been in any struggle for righteousness or decency that Yale men have not been on hand to give me strength and " The underlying thought of Mr. Bushnell's Sunday morning discourse was that man only gains and makes sure of his life by losing or giving it to the service of the individual and the state. By way of parenthesis, Mr. Bushnell said: "We had a glorious time together, meeting scores of friends whom we had given up all idea of ever seeing again. Half of the living graduates of the college were there. Yet from first to last one idea was uppermost, namely, recognition of services rendered. The great names of Yale's history were starred. We listened to their praises for three days. One orator remarked that if we were charged with being overfond and prejudiced in favor of our great men we would plead 'guilty' but stand unrepentant." Mr. Bushnell had especially an attentive and interested audience, and he preached with an inspiration begotten of his alma mater. The Yale bi-centennial will go down as the most brilliant event in the history of the

SILAS PEABODY.

Silas Peabody, who died at his home in Wakefield, on Friday, Oct. 8, was for several years, from 1852 to 1857, principal of what was then the High street grammar school of Arlington. It is the uniform testimony of those who were his pupils, that he was a man much respected and loved by all who knew him. He got very near to his pupils through that personal interest he ever had in their welfare. In the school report of the town of Arlington, for 1853, the following is written of Mr. Peabody: "Ine High street grammar has been favored still with the successful instructions and management of Mr. Peabody. His course, which had an auspicious commencement, has continued to be progressive and prosperous. As a teacher of principles we think he excels." Mr. Peabody taught for several years in Lexington, having his home at the same time at the Heights. Mr. Peabody married Augusta Locke, daughter of the late Elbridge Locke. Whatever Mr. Peabody did, he did well. He gave his heart to his work, and thus it is that his pupils have such pleasant memories of their friend and teacher. Mr. Peabody was always interested in the Heights, where he had his home for so long a time, Several of his friends from Arlington and Lexington attended his funeral at his late home in Wakefield, on Sunday, Oct. 20. The interment was in Winchester.

THIS HUNTER'S MOON.

Where is the man to be found in this latitude who is not, or rather who has not been, enjoying this October moon which is supposed to shed forth its silvery light especially for the lover of the chase? These evenings, as were those in September under the light of the harvest moon, are simply delightful. The entire atmosphere, so kindly and softened, lends these moonlit evenings a charm which none can resist. How we pity that man or woman who is not susceptible to the sweet influences of the harvest and the hunter's moon! As we walked down the mountain side the other morning to take the carriage for the train which brought us on our homeward way, the great big moon was just going down behind Black mountain, and what a picture! It was beyond all description. The glories of an early October morning under the light of the setting moon is a sweet poem written in the heavens for every lover of the picturesque and beautiful. These evenings of the past week, how they have glorified every material object!

SERIOUS CHARGES.

SERIOUS CHARGES.

The charge of assault and robbery alleged to have been committed in East Lexington. Wednesday evening, was brought against John Kennedy, of Somerville avenue, Somerville, at the Concord court, yesterday morning, by Carrie Stevens, of 2 Line street, Boston. He was held under $500 bonds for the grand jury. The story of the complainant, who is a fine appearang young woman, is straightforward, and is to the effect that her desire to earn an honest living was taken advantage of for criminal jurposes. She testified that Tuesday she advertised for a position as housekeeper. Wednesday the defendant answered it, offering her a fair inducement to fill the position of housekeeper in his home which he claimed to be in Lexington. She finally agreed to accompany him, and Wednesday evening went with him to Fast Lexington. The crimes alleged in the complaint were committed near Pleasant street, and a dollar was the extent of the robbery. The complainant said sae soon after boarded an electric and alpeaded for protection to the conductor. The defendant followed, but left the car when Officer W. B. Foster gut on. He was told what had taken place, and leaving the car he found his man and placed him under arrest.

Kennedy admitted to Officer Foster and Chief Franks that he had deccived the woman regarding the position offered but denied the charges. He was unable to procure ball.

LOWE—DINWOODIE.

LOWE—DINWOODIE.

A very pretty home wedding took place at East Lexington, Tuesday evening, when Charles Herbert Lowe and Elizabeth Tennent Dinwoodie were united in marriage by the Rev. Lorenzo D. Cochrane, pastor of Follen church. The wedding ceremony occurred at six o'clock at the residence of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. David Dinwoodie, on Massachusetts avenue. Frank W. Plerce was best man. The bride was attended by her two sisters, Miss Jane J. and Miss Marion C. Dinwoodie, and was dressed in a gown of white chirfon trimmed with lace and ribbons. She carried a large bunch of white chrysanthemums. A wedding supper was served and a reception was held during the evening. The many valuable presents received are a token of the high esteem in which both of the contracting parties are held by their many friends, a large number of whom gathered at the depot when they boarded the train for Boston 'mid showers of rice which fell all around them. After a short trip to Manchester, 'N. H., Mr. and Mrs. Lowe will return and reside in East Lexington.

ELECTION DAY.

Tuesday is election day, but Lexington has no town business on hand. The voters will designate their choice for state officers, and that is all. These officials have been appointed: Ballot clerks, Charles A. Swan; Abram B. Smith; deputy ballot clerks, Irving Stone, B. J. Harrington; tellers, Charles F. Nourse, Louis L. Crone, James A. Hurley, John Moakley, Francis Locke, George L. Pierce, Charles G. Kauffmann and James Barnes.

Two matches have been played so far this season by the Lexington High school golf team, one with the Boston English high, in which it defeated the latter in a score, 14 to 3; the other with Arlington High, which defeated Lexington in a score, 9 to 4. But the boys don't find a little defeat like that, for they remember what they did to Arlington High, last season, about this time.

The danger in using a rifle for hunting purposes was forcibly illustrated one day this week when a stray shot from some gunners in the vicinity of Mount Ephraim pased across the tracks and platform at the East Lexington station. The builet was but a few feet from the ground and came very near hitting some little children who were standing there. The noise frightened them, and when they realized what it was they started and ran as fast as their legs could carry them. They certainly had a narrow escape.

FOLLEN CHURCH.

FOLLEN CHURCH.

Harvest services were held in Follen church, last Sunday morning. The church was tasefully decorated with autumn colors and at the foot of the pulpit were arranged the fruits and vegetables which the children had brought as their annual offering to their little friends at the Children's mission in Boston. The service opened with an organ voluntary by Miss Anna M. Lawrence, the church organist. This was followed by an anthem by the choir, ine remainder of the service was as follows: Song by the Sunday school; responsive reading; song, "The Corn Is Kipe for Reaping;" prayer; song, "Singing the Reapers Homeward Come;" hymn; sermon; hymn, "Auld Lang Syne;" benediction.

The pastor preached a short sermon.

Reapers Homeward Come;" hymn; sermon; hymn, "Auld Lang Syne;" benediction.

The pastor preached a short sermon, taking his text from John, 4th chapter, 37th and 38th verses: "One soweth but another reapeth." He compared the various seasons of nature to the seasons of a man's life. This day is one of God's nymns of praise. The autumn of our life should not be mournful, but rather the crowning glory of our success, a consummation of our past efforts. We reap a spiritual harvest of those who have lived in the past, even as the farrier gathers in the autumn the harvest of his long summer's labors.

At the evening meeting, Rev. James Sallaway delivered his lecture on "On and About Jerusalem." Mr. Sallaway resides in Bedford and has travelled some fifteen years in the Holy Land. His lecture was clear and comprehensive, and gave his audience a most graphic picture of that famous city and its surroundings.

The Looking Backward party at the club, tonight, will take place at 8 o'clock. To carry out the idea of the party the participants are requested to reverse their costumes, wear masks over the backs of the heads and cover their faces with some suitable material to give the appearance of walking in one direction and looking in the opposite. This will be an interesting and novel party if all will enter into the spirit of it. Music, three pieces of Holbrook's orchestra.

All ladies interested and wishing to bowl are cordially invited to the clubhouse, Tuesday, at 2 o'clock, when arrangements will be made for the winter. The next whist party will be held Monday evening, Nov. 11, at 8 o'clock. At the last 'party there were ten tables. Mr. and Mrs. Saben carried off first honors. It is hoped next time that an even larger number will be present.

The second entertainment of the season will be given in the club hall, Tuesday, Nov. 19, at 7.45 o'clock. The Criterion club, of Boston, will present a fouract comedy, entitled "A Pair of Spectacles." There will be dancing after the entertainment.

Another car barn is being built for the Lexington & Boston Street Raliway company near the barn in North Lexington The increasing business of the company has made it imperative to have another building in which to store its extra cars, and that at once. The structure will be 200 feet long by 100 feet wide, and will accommodate II tracks. It is agreed by the builders that the barn will be ready for occupancy within a month, although the wood work has yet hardly beguin. Pierce & Barnes, of Boston, are the architects, Frank Stewart has the contract for the stone work and Charles Island, the building. There are some 25 cars now which cannot be stored and are exposed to all kinds of weather. As nothing affects the durability of cars more than being allowed to stand idle out of doors, it is economy for the company to hustle the work of construction.

Supt. W. H. Greene, of the Lexington & Boston Street Railway company, in Company with Byron Anderson, station agent in the center, returned this week from a two weeks' hunt in Maine. They had exceptionally fine luck, bringing home two deer apiece, and also 22 partridges, a fox and an other. The latter was the result of Mr. Greene's true aim. The town which the hunters made as headquarters is Holeb, and both men steak in the highest terms of the hunting there. A third man who was with them also shot two deer. The Lexington men's deer have been exhibited at Jackson's market.

The Art club will hold the first meeting of the Season Monday.

The chief feature of the last meeting of the Tourist club at Mrs. Unarles E. Carter's, on Hancock street was a paper by Mrs. H. A. C. Woodward, on "Colonial Architecture." This interesting paper was most carefully prepared, and showed a great deal of thought and talent on the part of the writer. In proparing the paper, Mrs. Woodward had secured a large number of fine illustrations from various sources, which were passed around among the members, adding much to the interest of the meeting. Next Monday the society will meet at the home of Miss Emma Hamilin, on Bloomfield street.

Rev. Mr. Horton in his address following the dinner of the Sons of the American Revolution, paid the Lexington police a high, yet nevertheless true, compliment when he said the only difference there is between the Boston and the Lexington police is that the former know a thief, but do not know him when they see him; while the latter know a thief, and never fail to recognize him.

HANCOCK CHURCH.

The topic of the evening meeting at the Hancock church, Sunday, was "Courage," It was an especially strong subject and very clearly expounded by the pastor, who chose Martin Luther as a true illibstration of a courageous man in every sense.

We are told how this man dared to stand up for what he thought to be right, at the risk of his life.

The subject for tomorrow evening, which is "Temperance," promises to be quite as interesting.

TOWN FATHERS CONSIDER.

In answer to inquiries as to the presence of the surveyor's stakes on the hospital property; also, whether or no the selectmen have replied to the Boston & Concord Street Railway Co. petitions, asking for extended location to the railroad crossings comes the following information:

The stakes were placed to gain an idea.

the railroad crossings comes the following information:

The stakes were placed to gain an idea as to what effect the taking of a strip for street purposes would have upon the appearance of the estate, and not placed as lines for immediate work.

The selectmen have not yet made answer to the petitioner's request, as cited at the hearing. We are very fortunate in having a trio of men at the helm of town affairs who realize and investigate all attendant consequences of granting such a petition.

The townspeople have on past occasions shown a decided inclination toward preferring to grant locations to the Boston Elevated Co. and there is a possibility that that company may ask a location. Then again there are a number of dang-rous crossings which such a line would open, even though but of short length. The matter of expenditure for street widening, and the rather unnecessary cause for more connections all serve as problems which we consider our town fathers are wisely considering before giving away a franchise.

WAVERLEY UNITARIAN SOCIETY.

Rev. Mr. Allen spoke last Sunday in the Unitarian church, on "Satan, the Servant of God." He first pointed out that in the Old Testament Satan is nevthe Unitarian church, on "Satan, the Servant of God." He first pointed out that in the Old Testament Satan is never represented as the enemy of God, but as really His servant. The Book of Job thus represents Satan as sent to test the goodness of Job. In all the Old Testament God is represented as creating evil as well as good. But it is a severe trial of faith to believe this even today, to see that all evil is really a ministration of blessing. See how this is more and more evident in the natural world! Weeds are plants the uses of which we do not know. Poisonous plants are found to have medicinal value, or by cultivation become delicious fruits. Two poisonous minerals combine to make sait. Foul things like the slime of the street may be chemically transformed into gems. The sterile ocean gives a highway between nations, facilitates commerce and favors civilization. Pain is the sentinel that warns us of danger to the welfare of our bodies. Then, in the meral world, science shows that man is developing and that much of the moral evil of life is the lingering of passions which were once useless and now must be outgrown. The noblest civilizations have been created by the strong vitality of nations which once were fierce and brutal. Bad men have often been God's instruments for bringing about beneficent changes, which good men could not have caused. War is one of the greatest of calamities and yet it has often brought blessings which nothing else could bring. The passions of man which lead him into sin have all a beneficent purpose in his nature. There is, thus, no real evil outside of the human will, and the real cause of this evil is the feebieness of the undeveloped human will, when growing lito a better life. The story will be "Overcoming Evil With Good." The Ladies' Union society met with Mrs. E. Brown, Jr., on Trapelo road, Tuesday afternoon.

The Young People's Religious union will hold their regular meeting at 6,30 tomorrow evening. Frank Stearns will lead. Subject, "William Ellery Channing."

***** ALL DUE TO A PAIR

"How is it you have never married, Major Henderson?" asked my wife.

"Oh, I was born a bachelor," replied the major, and"-

"Don't be so foolish! I want to know the real reason."

"The real reason," said Major Henderson slowly, "is that my feet are so small."

"What do you mean?" The major leaned back in his chair and smiled round the table. Jane-if that girl had been born a man, she would have been butler to an archbishop-filled his glass with port, and after a sip at it he began his story:

It was a good many years ago that it all happened (he said slowly)-a good many more years, in fact, than I care to count. I was a young subaltern and over head and ears in love with Kittle Marshmount. I was a timid youth in those days, and although I thought that Kittie rather liked me than otherwise, I had never dared to tell her of my own feelings. I had often tried, but whenever began something was sure to happen to make Kittie laugh, and then all my courage oozed out of my finger tips.

One evening in June there was a dinner party at the Marshmounts, and I was there. I was off to Gib. to join my battery next morning early, and I had made up my mind to speak to Kittie that same evening after dinner. You can imagine how I enjoyed the meal. I felt like a nervous man must feel who is going to be hanged as soon as day breaks, and to add to my misery I had on a pair of new patent leather boots, which were too tight and gave me awful pain.

As dinner went on my feelings and my boots combined became too much for me and I dropped my fork, on purpose, stoop ed down, unbuttoned the right boot, which hurt me most, and kicked it off. The relief was wonderful, and for a little while I actually contrived to talk to Kit-

She was charming that evening. There was something about her that showed me the was sorry that I was leaving England, and she wore some tearoses I had sent her in the bosom of her dress.

"Miss Marshmount," I said, while des sert was being handed round, "I want to talk to you very particularly after din-

"Come up and sing duets instead of smoking those horrid cigars you are so fond of, then," was Kittie's reply. And I felt as though I had suddenly been translated into a seventh heaven.

A few minutes later I bent down under the table and felt about for my boot. I couldn't find it. I dropped another fork, stooped down and looked for my property under the table. It wasn't there—at least, I couldn't find it anywhere. I came up again, purple in the face, and when ladies left the room I couldn't open the door for them.

Kittie was very naturally annoyed at this, and I was the youngest man at the table too. But how could I hop around in front of everybody, with one boot on?

"I shall expect you up stairs in five minutes;" whispered Kittie. And I think, although, of course, I can't be certain, which I gave her.

that she returned the squeeze of the hand Directly the women were out of the room I went down on all fours under the table and searched everywhere for that confounded boot of mine. It had van ished as completely as last month's moon! "What the dickens are you doing, Henasked Tom Marshmoun might have been better if I had told him at once, but he was one of those incorri gible jokers who would have bothered me about my tight boots all the evening if he had known, so I told him it was nothing.

Then Kittie came back into the room to speak to her brother for a few moments. She sat there, darting daggers' thrusts at me out of those gentian blue eyes of hers. I forgot to say that I had lit a big cigar, to give myself countenance and think up a plan for finding my boot

"Well," said Kittie presently, "I am going up to the drawing room again, but I can't make my entry among all the dow agers without the support of a manly arm." And she looked straight at me. I felt the perspiration pouring down my cheeks and forehead, and I know that I blushed scarlet, but I didn't move. How could I? I couldn't lead Kittie Marshmount into her mother's drawing room with "one boot off and the other boot on," like the boy in the nursery rhyme.

Then George Heseltine came up, smiling fatuously, as he always did, and offered his arm to Kittie. She took it, of course, and afterward.

as you know, she took George Heseltine as well, the brute! Directly she had gone I crawled down under the table again and right over in he far corner, near the head of the table, heave the point of the boot which had played me such a nasty trick. It's extraordinary, I thought, how these inanimate objects travel. I reached out for it, but it had stuck, somehow. I gave it a good pull. There was a crash, a yell, and when I came out from underneath the table I found old Marshmount on his back in the fireplace with all the other men standing round him trying not to laugh.

Old Marshmount was a choleric old chap, and the language he used was frightful. He thought I had been playing off a practical joke on him, and he was furious. I tried to explain, but every word I said was drowned, either by laughter of the other fellows, and I laughter of the other fellows, and I laughter of the other fellows, and I couldn't get a word of explanation in.

Luckily the old man wasn't really hurt, but only shaken, and presently he got up and led the way to the drawing room.

I followed last, hobbling along as best could and trying to hide my bootless foot behind the other one.

"Young chap must be going mad!" were the words I heard in old Marshmount's growl as I made my way into the room. Just as my luck would have it, Kittie was sitting on the far side of the room, and I didn't dare cross over under the fire of the dowager's eyes with only one boot on and the other foot in a blue silk stocking. It was horribly tantalizing, for Kittie was on a little sofa near the piano and there was lots of room for two.

I remained standing by the door, hidden—at least, my right foot hidden—behind a large standard lamp and spent a miserable ten minutes watching Kittie, whom Heseltine had joined upon the sofa.

Presently tea came in, and behind the footman with the biscuits trotted Fido. Fido was Kittie's spaniel-a nasty little King Charles I. beast, with more ears than sense. The little brute had my boot in his silly mouth and was pretending that it was a rat and worrying it. If it had been a rat, he would have squealed and hidden away underneath a chair. I was furious. I made a bolt forward to catch hold of Fido, my foot slipped, I caught at the nearest thing I could reach and down came the footman with the tea on top of me.

I have never seen anybody so absolutely furious as old Marshmount was.

"This sort of thing may be very funny in a sergeant's messroom," he thundered, "but I'm-I'm-I'm hanged"-it was a terrible exertion for the old man to change the word he meant to say-"I'm hanged if I'll have it in my drawing "And he's taken one of his boots off.

too," said Tom. "Whatever is the matter with you this evening, old man-a touch of sunstroke, or what?"

"Sunstroke! Sunstroke be-be stroked!" shouted his father. "It's port-that's what it is. He's drunk, sir! Yes, sir, you're drunk, and if your father wasn't one of my oldest friends, I'd"-

I don't know what old Marshmount would have done if the governor had not been one of his oldest friends, for just at that moment Fido, with my boot in his mouth, came within kicking range, and I let fly with the foot that had a boot on. Fido dropped the boot and flew across the room like a punted football, dropping, with a yap, just at Kittie's feet. I snatched up my boot, but didn't stop to put it on, and left the house hurriedly, without saying goodby to anybody. I spent most of the night composing a note to Kittie with a full explanation, but it read so absurdly that, after having written eighteen or twenty different versions, I gave it up and sent my man round at 7 next morning with a few lines to her, begging her to see me for two minutes before I left at 10 for Gib., so that I might explain.

My own messenger brought the answer back to me.

"Dear Mr. Henderson," she wrote-we had been brought up together, and she had never in her life called me anything but Jack-"A man who can so far forget himself as you did last night and who can ill treat a poor dumb beast who had done nothing to incur your anger"—the italics are mine, not Kittie's—"can have no explanation to make to which it would be worth my while to listen.

"I am leaving town early this morning myself for a fortnight's stay with my friend Gladys Heseltine, so anyhow it would be difficult to find time to see you. Besides, father says he will never have you in the house again. You have offended him dreadfully."

So, you see (said the major), if I hadn't been so vain of my small feet and had worn my boots just one size larger I might have been a Benedict by this time. And the major looked down at his well varnished boots, smiled into his mustache and didn't look altogether miserable, I thought .- Answers.

Persian Rugs.

A square foot of the best Persian rug is worth about $10, and it takes a single weaver twenty-three days to complete this portion. This allows the weaver about 44 cents per day for her wool and her labor, but three-fourths of this amount goes to pay for the wool. Only 11 cents per day is left for the weaver. First-class work guaranteed. Horses The wage of the producer of the inferior called for and delivered. article is somewhat better. A square foot of an inferior rug is sold for about 60 cents, and the time required for weaving it is but two days, thus allowing the weaver 30 cents per day for her wool and labor. She uses inferior wool, washes but little of it and pays only a nominal sum for a cheap dye. The framework of her loom costs comparatively little, as the rug ft produces is from twenty to thirty times the size of the superior rug. Thus it ap pears that in the long run the inferior weaver is better paid than the one who fatigues her brain with her efforts to produce a rug of the best quality.-Rosa Belle Holt in "Rugs, Oriental and Occi-

The Andaman Islands.

In the eastern part of the bay of Bengal is a group of islands called the Andaman islands. They are profusely covered with vegetation, nearly every kind of tree growing there. The scenery, too, is very grand, but the islands are unhealthy and on this account are not thickly populated. In fact, the natives are gradually dying off. They are quite uncivilized and once had an evil name for cannibalism, but live now chiefly on fish. Squatting on rocks or standing on rudely shaped boats, they shoot at the fishes with arrows, although some employ long spears.

The islands are used by the Indian government as a settlement for prisoners of the worst type, and it was while engaged in a tour of inspection in 1872 that Lord Mayo, the governor general of India, was stabbed to death by a desperate convict. -London Opinion.

Incorrect Diagnosis.

He posed as a fortune teller and mind reader, and when he was arrested and taken into a New York court for posting handbills on the street he explained his vocation to the presiding judge.

"And so you are a mind reader," said the interpreter of the law. "I wonder if you can read my mind.

"Oh, yes," replied the prisoner, apparently believing that a "bluff" would serve his cause as well as anything. "You are of a bright and cheerful disposition, and I can see by the merry twinkle in your mind that you are about to tell me to go home. "Your diagnosis is not correct," said the judge. "I was merely meditating whether I should make the fine five dollars or ten dollars. I think we will call it five dollars this time."

Mother Was to Blame.

Jock and Annie were to get married, and she had confided to him that her age was twenty. After the ceremony and festivities were over they both went home and retired for the night. Annie's mother resided next door and, being up early the following morning, thought she would give the happy couple a "rap up."

On the way to their door she suddenly remembered it was Annie's birthday. Knocking loudly at the door, she bawled

"Come away, Annie, get up. Ye ken ye're thirty the day." Jock, who was the first to hear the voice, astonished his mother-in-law by shouting: "For guidness' sake get up, Apnie, for we've sleepit ten years." — Pearson's

The Cross Country Ride §

A Story of an Automobile.

By GEORGE E. WALSH.

They were hopelessly stuck when I came along on my wheel. The country was a desolate waste around, the nearest town ten miles as the crow flies. The roads were-well, my muddy tires would not recommend them. "Broke down?" I asked with that evident concern a man always feels for two helpless ladies stranded by the wayside in an automobile. Of course I had anticipated my answer before the question was asked, for it was self evident. "Yes. The electricity or something has given out."

It was a sweet, girlish voice, which I admired, and the face harmonized with it. The other occupant of the vehicle was the mother, and not quite so attractive. "A bad place to break down," I suggested, dismounting. "See what I can do for you.

"It's very kind of you." "We wouldn't like to detain you, though," added the mother, looking at me as if she thought I was a highwayman. "No particular hurry," I replied. was out for a pleasant spin and got lost on this abominable road."

"And we, too, thought we would have a ride all alone. Papa never likes to have me go alone, but John was away, and l told mamma I knew how to run the machine. And I do!" "Certainly. But repairing it is another thing." "Yes. John had no business to let it get out of order."

"If you will dismount," I said, "I might make an investigation. I held out my arm to assist her, but her mother protested.

"Is it necessary? The roads are so muddy.' "No, not necessary for both," I added, already holding the arm of her daughter.

She stood by my side and watched me open the box, giving advice and directions about the location of the tools, which I appreciated. "The electricity has not given out," I announced later, "but there is something wrong with the battery. There's power enough in it to carry you fifty miles or kill a dozen men.' "Mercy, Stella, is there any danger?"

queried the woman in the automobile. "No. mamma." "Not any, madam," I added reassuring "However, I must get at the board under your feet. If you will kindly hold them up a moment"-'Wait! I will get out with Stella!"

"Not at all necessary." But she climbed down in a hurry, and I proceeded to lift the board. It was a common enough battery and motor, but a little kinky in its actions at times. Being somewhat of an electrician, I promised to repair the injury in a short time. "It's fortunate we met you," said Stella laughingly, "or we might have had to walk back to town." "Yes, it is very fortunate for me," I replied, without looking up, but through the machinery I could see looks of disapproval on the mother's face. That provoked me to work in silence for some minutes. Then, jumping into the automobile, I said: "Now I think the thing will go. Which lever do you use?"

"This one." She sprang lightly into the vehicle and touched the handle, giving it a sudden twist. Then the machinery did go. There were a whirring and buzzing that made us turn in alarm. The wheels dug into the mud so fast that they flung a handful straight at the mother, who stood directly back of us. The vehicle darted forward like a race horse. "Shut off the power!" I said quickly. Stella looked at me with a peculiar smile and said:

"I can't." "Why not? Let me try!" I took the lever from her hand and turned it clear around, but there was no diminution in the speed of the automobile. If anything, it seemed to gallop faster. We were now a hundred yards from our starting point. I turned to see the mother running after us, shouting:
"Stop, thief! Stop, stop! I'll have you arrested! But I was helpless. We were running too fast to jump. It was sure death to attempt it. So I tried to collect myself and said:

"This is serious. We must keep our heads." "Yes, very serious. But I'm not afraid -not yet.'

"Nor am I, out here in the country. It's like a cross country ride." "Yes; but we can't tell where it will end." We were making twenty miles an hour then, unless my calculations were wrong, and I had difficulty in holding the machine straight in its course. "I've been in runaways before," I gasped as the wind nearly blew my breath away, "but never in an automobile." "Nor have I," she answered, grasping her loosened hair, which streamed behind her. "But I've always wanted to be in one. "Then you'll have all you want before we get through with this. I think we are increasing our speed."

We passed a team, which shied at our vehicle and nearly upset the carriage in the gutter.

"We must be creating a sensation," suggested grimly, trying again to shut off

"Shouldn't wonder," she replied. Then eagerly, "But it's fun."
"Yes, lots of fun," I assented not wishing to be beaten by a girl. "I'm glad you're not afraid," she added, "for if you were I think I might be."
"Oh, I'm not a bit afraid," I replied, trying to keep a tremor from spoiling my voice. "So long as we keep the thing going we are all right."

"We bumped over a cat that tried to run across our path and scattered hairs and screeches around that vanished almost as soon as we noticed them. "Are you going through the village?"

she asked a moment later.
"I wouldn't if I could help it. I like the country much better. But there are no forks in the road and at this speed I'm afraid I could not turn around gracefully on this narrow road."

She laughed—softly and musically. "I should think not. We might be spilled out."

"Yes; spilled out." I shivered.

"What's the matter? Are you afraid

Dow?" "Not a bit," as I narrowly escaped knocking a man over, who shook his cane at us. "I'm just beginning to enjoy it." "I suppose mamma will be worried about us. "Yes, about you," I answered with difficulty. ficulty. "But not about me. I think she would like to see me killed and maugled.'

"She thought you were trying to steal the automobile—or me. Now she must be sure of it."

"I wouldn't steal this old-this machine for anything," I gasped. "But you"-

"Well, what were you going to say?" demurely. "You are quite another story, as some body has said."

"Kipling, you mean." "No; I mean you.'

"Oh, I see. I meant the story, or the one who said that"-"Here we come to the village," I interrupted desperately. "Are you afraid

"No. not unless you are." "Me afraid? Never! I don't know what fear is!" "Neither do I-at least not when-I'm with you.'

"That's kind of you. But I wish that old haycart would get out of our way and that hearse in front. Say, can't you toot the horn?" "Can I? Just listen!"

"That's it. Make them think Barnum's circus is coming, and they'll give us the right of way. Now, again, for there's a whole menagerie of people and horses in front."

It was the main street of the village, and we were dodging and dashing through it at a pace that frightened ev erybody and upset everything that got in our way. "See that fool ahead trying to stop us! He's the town officer!"

"Well, he's a brave man if he can stop "Do you wish he would?"

"Yes. No, of course not!" I stammered. "This is too much fun—with you -to wish anybody to stop us." "There he goes now, shaking his stick Isn't he mad now?"

"I suppose so," I replied, "but I can't took behind. This thing requires all of my attention."

"You look tired. Why, you're perspirat us! I'll toot the horn in his face.

ing! Are you getting a little afraid now? Just a little bit?" "Well, now, I may. No, no; of course not—not a single bit. It's jolly. It's a regular lark. And there's the country

"Another cross country ride! How many miles did you say the electricity would carry us?" "Fifty!" I groaned.

Outside of the village the road forked. One went down into the lowlands where the roads were good; the other climbed the hill I steered.

"How lovely!"

"Yes. Lovely!"

"Why, the roads are better the other way," she said. "I thought they were smoother up here," I lied. "No; this road leads up the side of the mountain, and we can never get to the a steep hill. I saw my hope, and toward top without stopping. I'm sure of it." "I thought the other one led up the mountain. How provoking!' "Yes; very provoking! It will spoil

There was disappointment on the pretty face, but when we climbed the hill and our vehicle panted and snorted under the exertion my courage and spirits returned. 'Well, it can't be helped now. We've had a splendid ride together. I shall always remember it."
"Yes; splendid! I hope mamma won't worry. "She won't, I'm sure. But I think I'll leave you in the village and not see her today. Worn out with its exertions, the vehicle came to a sudden standstill near the summit. Stella dismounted, and I quietly disconnected the machinery. "It's broken for good now," I said, examining it. "We will have to get a team to drag it back to the village." "How mean! I thought we should have a good run down the hill. You wouldn't be afraid, would you?"

"Certainly not," I faltered, looking down the steep road. "But it's out of the question now."
"Then we'll have to walk it." "Yes, but together, and that will be fun.'

"Not half as much as if we were riding

That was such a lark! It was the best cross country ride I ever had." "Yes; the best I ever had." Of course I escaped the irate mother's wrath, but I had to make a ten mile detour to avoid it, and when I found my digestive duties. When we assimilate our food rapidly, we are feeding the vital fire with straw in place of with coal. The former blazes away and often needs renewal, while the latter burns slowly, with more complete combustion, and gives a more equable supply of heat. Coffee and other things which hinder digestion, then, are to be regarded as damping down the digestive fires. It exactly expresses what the physiological facts testify and demonstrate. And so within limits we may still enjoy our cafe noir. Those of us who lag behind in our digestive arrangements will be equally wise if they refuse the fra-grant Mocha.

Coffee and Digestion. "Do nothing in a hurry" is the motto of the physiologist in respect of our grave

LESSON V, FOURTH QUARTER, INTER-NATIONAL SERIES, NOV. 3.

Text of the Lesson, Gen. 1, 15-26. Memory Verses, 18-21-Golden Text, Ps. xc, 12-Commentary Prepared by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1901, by American Press Association.]

Again we are called to pass over many most interesting and profitable items, but we trust that all teachers will note at east the following: God's gracious and comforting Interview with Jacob at Beersheba as he was about to leave Canaan, the meeting of Joseph and his father, Jacob's interview with Pharaoh, Jacob blessing Joseph and his two sons, his parting words to all his sons, his death and his burial at Hebron. 15. "Joseph will peradventure hate us, and will certainly requite us all the evil which we did unto him." One of the One of the hardest things on earth to bear is to be misunderstood, misjudged, slandered without cause, to be falsely accused by those to whom you have shown only loving kindness and for whom you have in your heart nothing but good will. Joseph had given these men every evidence of his forgiveness, he had wept over them and kissed them (xlv, 15) and had done all that love could do for them, but they did not believe that he really meant it, after all. What manner of men are these who cannot trust such a brother? Do we act like this toward the Lord Jesus? He came unto His own and His own received Him not, but they hated Him and called Him a devil and would not believe that He was their own Messiah.

16, 17. "Joseph wept when they spake unto him." The treatment of his brethren was enough to make him weep. If his father told them to say what they said he did, to ask Joseph to forgive what he had already so manifestly forgiven, that would be a cause for weeping; if his brethren were lying to him concerning their father, that would be sufficient to make him weep. Let us lay it to heart; if we have truly received and do put all our trust in the precious blood of Christ for our salvation, then such words as John vi, 37; i, 12; I John ii, 12; Isa. xliii, 25; Acts xiii, 38, 39, should give us perfect rest concerning the forgiveness of all our sins and our relationship to God; but how many believers, just like the brethren of Joseph, are ever questioning their relationship to God and wondering if their sins are really forgiven. This is ungrateful belief and g ieves the Holy Spirit and our blessed Lord.

18. "Behold, we be thy servants." This they said as they fell down before his This was not gratitude for his love, but seeking thus to obtain that favor which he had already freely bestowed upon them. For 17 years the brethren of Joseph had enjoyed his favor (xlvii, 28) and loving kindness, yet now they come abjectly before him to obtain that which had been theirs fully all these years. There are Christians who 15 or 20 or 30 or 40 years ago received through Christ the forgiveness of sins and were made children of God and joint heirs with Christ, yet are never sure that they are saved, never rejoicing in Him, but hope some day to be good enough for heaven if they can only prove faithful.

19, 20. "Fear not, for am I in the place of God?" What they needed was true of God?" What they needed was true penitence before God, against whom they had so grievously sinned and to whom perhaps they had never yet truly turned. There can be no peace of mind until we are sure that all that was against us before God has been put away (Col. ii, 13, 14). Covering sin from God never prospers, but confessing and forsaking it always bring mercy (Prov. xxviii, 13).

21. "He comforted them and spake kindly unto them." Another "fear not" and assurance of continued care and more kind words and no upbraiding. How manifestly the spirit of Christ was in Joseph. festly the spirit of Christ was in Joseph, for only the great grace of God, such as we read of in II Cor. viii, 9; ix, 8; I Tim. i, 14, could enable a man to act as Joseph did toward these brethren. He of whom Joseph was a wondrous type will comfort you and speak kindly to you, whoever you may be, if you will only come to Him, for He is the Father of mercies and the God of all comfort (II Cor. i. 2) 66 Lowell street near Arlimston line. the God of all comfort (II Cor. i, 3). Here we have the last two of these precious "fear nots" in this book; others are found in chapters xv, xxi, xxvi, xlii, xlvi.

22, 23, "And Joseph lived an hundred and ten years." See also verse 26. Since he was 30, when he first stood before Pharaoh (xli, 46), he had 80 years of prosperity in Egypt; enough to make him forget the few years of slavery and imprisonment, and we know that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory that awaits us (Rom. viii, 18). Jacob lived 147 years, Isaac 180, Abraham 175, so that Joseph's life was comparatively short, but how much of blessing for thousands and tens of thousands there was in it, and what an amount of fellowship with Christ! If we are here for Christ, He will see to it that we abide His appointed time, then we shall rest and shall stand in our lot at

14) and took an oath of his brethren that when they went they would take his bones along. This they did as they had promised and buried them in Shechem (Joshua xxiv, 32). This is the one thing mentioned of Joseph in Heb. xi, 22, "By faith Joseph when he died made mention of the departing of the children of Israel and gave commandment concerning his bones." Joseph was sure that however long the waiting time might be the promises of God would be fulfilled. This he had learned in his own experience. We are reminded of II Sam. xxiii, 5. Those who have like faith with Joseph and Da-rid expect to see all the unfulfilled promises concerning Israel yet literally fulfilled. See Isa. ix, 6, 7; Jer. iii, 17; xxiii, 5, 6; Ezek. xxxvii, 21-28, and all others ises concerning Israel yet literally fulfilled. See Isa. ix, 6, 7; Jer. iii, 17; xxiii, 5, 6; Ezek. xxxvii, 21-28, and all others according to Acts iii, 19-21.

26. "They embalmed him, and he was put in a coffin in Egypt." What a strange ending to this first book in the Bible! It begins with life, but ends with death, but the Bible ends with life everywhere on earth and death destroyed by the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ (Rev. xxii, 3-21; xxi, 4, 5), who because of sin became a sin offering, a sacrifice for sin lead of the strange of the same in the became a sin offering, a sacrifice for sin information.

As long as that coffin abode in Egypt the promise to Abram in Gen. xv, 14, was unfulfilled, and as long as the body of a saint remains in the dust of this earth some other promises remain unfulfilled, such as I Thess. iv, 16, 17; I Cor. xv, 51, 52. The Courage of a ...Noncombatant

By W. R. ROSE. 5 31-1001-1001-1001-1001-1001-100

They were having an informal gathering at the Buffington-Browns. Mrs. Buffington-Brown's brother, Jack, had dropped into town suddenly, and his loving sister wanted a few of the young people of her acquaintance to meet him, and it had to be an informal affair because Jack was obliged to be in Washington at a certain bour, and there was only this one evening to meet him.

His sister was very proud of Jack, and well she might be. Jack was in the army and had seen service in both Cuba and Luzon. It had been brilliant service, too. especially in the Philippines, where with a little band in khaki he had held off a host of insurgents and then been rescued just as the last cartridge was reached. He had got a bullet in his arm in this warm affair and never knew it until after all was over. And he had been mentioned in the dispatches and been promoted, and the newspapers made quite a hero of him.

and st, with thick dark hair and a bro simplexion and wonderful flashing. And he talked well too. Being and the lion of the affair, he had to talk, and of course his talk turned in the direction of his own exploits. That was what the guests called for and what they wanted, and, roar as modestly as he might, he had perforce to roar of his own prowess.' It was "Please tell us about that fight at Tarrimena, Mr. Chalmers. How did you feel when the last cartridge was gone? And is it true that you made the

When it was time to break up and the goodbys were being said. Mrs. Buffington-Brown had asked Edgar French to see that May Freeman got home safely. The distance wasn't far, and Edgar was an old friend of the family. Perhaps Maud Buffington-Brown had an idea that Edgar would be pleased at the trust reposed in him. Everybody liked Edgar.

May Freeman looked up at him as he carefully adjusted her cape. Perhaps she mentally contrasted him with the glorious Jack. Edgar was of medium height, of fair complexion, with a rather firm chin and bright gray eyes. He was not of the stalwart build that marked the war hero, and yet he looked well knit despite his slenderness. As they moved away from the house

May turned to him and said:

"Would you mind, Mr. French, if we prolong our walk a little? The night is so pleasant and the air so bracing. I'm choked up with all that battle smoke, and the clear atmosphere is such a relief.' "I am delighted," said Edgar, and it gave him quite a thrill to feel that he could grant her even so small a favor. "We will walk around two extra blocks, if you please," said May, "and by that time I think I'll get the rattle of the muskerry out of my ears. Wasn't he

"He certainly was," replied Edgar. "To me it seemed that he was in almost as embarrassing a position as that at Tarrimena. But he came out of it with flying colors." "I should have thought all the men would have been dreadfully jealous of him." laughed May.

"No doubt we were for the moment," laughed Edgar in return, "but possibly we were consoled by the thought that it is quite impossible for all of us to go to war. Some of us, as the philosophical young gashtter in 'Caste' remarks, must stay home and pay rates and taxes."

But May did not laugh at this. "I suppose," she said, "that it is an inherited tradition that makes women love physical courage. Probably it comes down to them from the time when man fought for them and the stronger or braver took the prize." She turned and half looked at Edgar as she spoke. Perhaps she wondered if this man whom she knew loved her would be willing to fight for her as the wooer fought for his bride when the earth was "I know that I am arguing from the unsympathetic standpoint," said Edgar, "but it seems to me that any man who is useful to society, who fills any worthy niche, no matter how small, is doing society as well as himself an injustice when he needlessly or recklessly exposes himself to danger. Of course there are times when such exposure becomes a necessity. It was so with the man who has enter tained us tonight. That's his trade. It's shop with him as much as cotton brokerage is with me. What I contend is that the ordinary man's life is quite too valuable to the state to be thrown away through a merely barbarous sentiment.'

May was silent for a moment. "I think you must be brave, or you wouldn't have the courage to advance such a belief," she said. "It's a part of the spirit of commercialism, isn't it?'

Edgar winced. "I suppose it is," he said.

"And you mean to say," she went on without heeding his murmured assent, "that if you were attacked, say, by highwaymen, you would offer no resistance?" "Well," said Edgar slowly, "it would be a question with me whether a trinket or two and a few dollars would be a fair equivalent for the grievous risk I would run of much bodily injury in case I re-

"And you would hold up your hands and submit to the looting and the humili-ation?" May asked, and there was an unnusical edge to her usual pleasant tones. "Under ordinary circumstances I fancy

I should play the philosopher rather than the hero," replied Edgar, and he asked himself in the silence that followed why he was painting his picture in such unprepossessing colors.

They had almost circled the second block and were on their way back to the avenue in which May resided. The cross street was a lonely one, and as they near ed the corner of an intersecting alley Edgar saw that three men were standing un-der a lamppost. They separated as Edgar's eyes rested on them and came slowly forward, two next the curb and one cl to the fence. Edgar looked back. The street behind him as far as he could see

He did not change his gait, but, with May's hand resting lightly on his arm, walked steadily forward. May was silent. His words had jarred upon her

As they approached the trio Edgar saw that he and May must pass between the pair and the single man. If anything was to happen, he would precipitate it.

He walked directly at the pair. one of the men drew something from his pocket that glistened as he raised it. Edgar swung May back.

"What's that?" he said.

"Throw up your hands," growled the gruff man, and the barrel of a revolver was thrust against Edgar's breast. "Go through him, Jim. Hustle.'

The second man pulled open the victim's coat. Edgar's hands, held in front of him, with his arms half bent, were slowly rising. His eyes were fixed on the eyes of the man with the revolver.

May had drawn back instantly as the third man quickly advanced. Then she started to run up the steps of the nearest

The third man intercepted May in her flight.

"Edgar!" she cried. The eye of the man with the revolver wavered. At the same instant Edgar struck up the weapon with his left arm and thrust his right elbow with all the force he could command into the second man's face. There was a sharp report, and Edgar felt something like the sear of a hot iron across his temple. The fingers of his left hand caught the ruffian's wrist, and with his right hand he struck him a crushing blow in the face. The second man, dazed for a moment, sprang forward and tried to grapple with Edgar from behind, but the latter, fighting desperately for possession of the revolver, had whirled his man half round, and for a second or two it was impossible to grasp him.

"Joe!" gasped the first ruffian. The man who had been guarding May and who had paused irresolutely when the revolver report rang out sprang forward with a short billy in his hand. At the same moment a second report was heard, and the first ruffian dropped to his knees. choked, gasped and pitched forward. The second man stood aghast, but the third man, with an oath, sprang at Edgar.

The latter stepped back and met the rush with a revolver shot. The fellow's arm dropped to his side, and he roared with pain. At this the second man turned into the street and ran swiftly down the roadway. The third man followed him, but much more slowly. It had all happened so quickly-the halt, the struggle, the discomfiture of the highwaymen-that the impulse to scream had not come to May. She had stood on the lower step and watched the fight with suspended breath and parted lips. Now she ran forward.

"Oh, Edgar," she cried, "are you hurt?" He was panting a little and for a moment could not answer.

"I guess not," he laughed. He put his hand to his bleeding head. "Seems to be a scratch or something up here. Great luck, wasn't it?" And he laughed again. "Give me your handkerchief, Edgar.

She tenderly bound up his wound. Her face came very close to his. Suddenly she kissed him and quickly drew back. "You are splendid!" she murmured. "Pooh, pooh," he smilingly protested.

"I'm really a coward at heart. It was your call for help that made me forget myself. Ah, here are the police." Two men in uniform came around the nearest corner and hurried toward them. Edgar stepped forward. One of the officers knew him and called him by name, and the story of the affray was soon told. The head of the prostrate ruffian was raised and Edgar's friend at once recognized him as a notorious criminal. "The fellow's hit hard," the officer "Simpson, call an ambulance and

"Yes," replied Edgar, "I'll cheerfully hot fellow really shot admit it. But this fellow really shot himself. Here's his revolver."

"Where's your weapon?"

"you're a plucky one!"

"I haven't any. The officer looked up. "Well," he said with much emphasis,

QUEER METHODS USED IN HUNTING FISH AND FLESH.

"Hold on there!" said a gruff voice, and The Way In Which Malays Kill Sharks by the Thousands - Two Schemes For Trapping Tigers-The Python and His Pig Dinner.

> If you were handed a fish, a dog and a strip of bamboo and bidden to kill a ten foot shark with these crude implements, the odds are that you would decline the unequal contest. Nevertheless the Malays annually kill thousands of these voracious monsters by this means without incurring the slightest risk.

The method is as follows: The bamboo is split into a strip measuring about four feet in length by one inch in width. Having been well charred at each end and pointed, it is coiled into the smallest possible space and sewed into the fishskin. The dog is next killed, trussed and his interior cavity refilled with the delusive fishskin. Forthwith Jack Shark swallows the dog at a gulp, and his doom is sealed. Three or four days later, when he has digested the dog and the fishskin, the bamboo flies apart and gradually penetrates the great brute's side with fatal effect. It is not pretty sport, but it is marvelously effective and absolutely safe.

Were you handed a piece of meat, a bundle of leaves and a pot of birdlime you would scarcely feel yourself a match for a Bengal tiger, but the little Bengalese are particularly successful in catching Mr. Stripes with these crude implements.

The meat is first of all tied to the bough of a tree some twelve feet from the ground. The leaves, which are the size of large plane leaves, are next smeared with the birdlime and thickly strewn, sticky side uppermost, beneath the bough. Mr. Stripes, perambulating past, smells the bait and makes a leap for it. He misses for the very good reason that it has been purposely placed a couple of feet higher than he can reach Again and again he springs for it, and each time he alights upon a fresh lot of leaves, which stick fast to his huge feet. Now he notices them and starts to try to lick them off, with the result that he transfers them from his claws to his face. He gets impatient, the lime gets into his eyes and makes them smart, and he redoubles his efforts, only to redouble the number of leaves. Finally he loses his temper and, half blinded with rage, fear and birdlime, rolls over and over until he looks like a jack in the green. Then, when he is no longer capable of rational resistance, the wily native emerges and jabs him in some vital part. Sometimes, however, Mr. Stripes is destined for some great menagerie. Then the procedure is different. He is first of all trapped by an ingenious arrangement of weights and springs which convert an inrocent looking cowshed into a four sided wooden cell the moment he passes the threshold. His removal thence is ingen ious.

A tube of string matting measuring some twelve feet in length by about eighteen inches in diameter and strongly fortified with rattans and bamboo is suddenly introduced lengthways into the darkened cell. Mr. Stripes, who has meanwhile been stirred up by co-unseen hands, sees the welcome daylight and leaps madly for it. But although has sprung into the narrow tunnel it is only to find the end safely barred. Before he can say "Jack Robinson" deft fingers have barred his exit from behind, and he is sprawling powerless in a straight jacket which fits him like the skin of a sausage. His subsequent transport is merely a question of weight lift-The wily Chinaman gets some queer sport. He is a great fisherman, and his "tackle" is unique of its kind. His right

Rev. John G. Taylor Officially Installed Pastor of Park Avenue Church in Arlington-The Result of Unanimous Call by the Members.

The ecclesiastical council called by the The ecclestastical council called by the Park Avenue church, at ..riington Heights, to install its pastor, Rev. John G. Taylor, met in their meeting house, Wednesday afternoon at 3.30 o'clock. The council organized with Rev. Samuel C. Bushnell, of Arlington, as moderator, and the Rev. C. S. McFarland, of Maplewood, as scribe. Twenty-three churches were represented, besides others specially invited.

Invited.

The records of the church as to the call of Mr. Taylor were read, and also his letter of acceptance. Mr. Taylor then gave a brief account of his preparation for and life in the ministry. While in Melrose Mr. Taylor took an active part in town affairs, especially in school matters. Through his effort, involving one of the liveliest contests ever known in Melrose town meetings, a new schoolhouse was secured for his end of the town.

After leaving Melrose, Mr. Taylor and his family went to Santa Cruz, Cal., where he served the Congregational church of that city for three vears. ### WELL KNOWN SCULPTOR.

WELL KNOWN SCULPTOR.

A representative of the Enterprise had an enjoyable interview on Wednesday with Cyrus E. Dallin, the distinguished sculptor. Mr. Dallin was found at his pleasant home on Arlington Heights, at the corner of Cliff street and Oakland avenue. Mr. Dallin in selecting for himself and family a place of residence, has evinced his love for nature and art, for he has his home literally on the very tip of the heights, with the grove of the gods close beside. Mr. Dallin, a native of Utah, came east in early manhood to study his profession. He was in Boston for several years, with the best masters as a student, and subsequently he studied for five years in Paris. Mr. Dallin has distinguished himself in all his work, and especially has he placed himself among the foremost artists by his equestrian statue of Paul Revere giving "the alarm to every Middlesex village and farm." And then his "Signal of Peace" in Lincoln park, Chicago, which is represented by an Indian mounted on an Indian pony, and that other equestrian statue known as the "Medicine Man," which is to be placed in Fairmount park, Philadelphia. Mr. Dallin's studio affords the greatest interest to the lover of art. There one may walk amidst forms answering back to nature. Mr. Dallin has become proficient in art, because he loves and appreciates nature. Possessed of much which is termed sentiment and poetry, he has expressed himself in lines the most artistic. Mr. Dallin gave the Enterprise man the run of his studio and the hospitality of his home. Arlington has become rightfully distinguished, not only through that creative art which Mr. Dallin represents in such an appreciative way.

Meeting at Arlington Heights Favors Renaming Streets for Famous Rider—Brief Addresses Made by Parties Interested.

An interesting meeting was that at Arlington Heights, Saturday afternoon, in support of the movement to rename vane street and a part of Appleton street to Paul Revere road in honor of that Revolutionary patriot whose name is on the lips of every schoolboy. As the town meeting called for Tuesday has an article in the warrant asking for the change in the name, the exercises Saturday were intended to help along the movement, and there is no doubt but that they had that effect. The one who has been acand there is no doubt but that they had that effect. The one who has been actively interested in the project is Mrs. Marion A. McBride, who had two ancestors who responded to the alarm at Lexington. Solomon Snow and Jonathan Warner. Warner.

The exercises opened with prayer by Rev. John G. Taylor, pastor of the Fark Avenue Congregational church. The pupils of the Lake school sang "America.", Edward McGlennan, of Boston, toid the story of Revere's ride and the following events in an entertaining way. Nixon Waterman, a resident of the Heights, read an original poem, entitled "Sunshine and Shadow of a century."
Cyrus E. Dallin, the sculptor, also a Heights resident, and the sculptor of the Heights resident, and the sculptor of the equestrian statue of Paul Revere, gave an interesting resume of Paul Kevere's career as one of the pioneer artists of Brief addresses were also made Brief addresses were also made by Rev. A. W. Lorimer, pastor of the Arium ton Heights Baptist caurch, C. S. Parker and Frederic A. Bisbee. A feature of the affair was the whistling of patriotic selections by Miss Ella Chamberlain, of Cambridge.

Mrs. McBride was assisted in the details of the affair by Mrs. T. A. Jernegan, Mrs. John G. Taylor, Mrs. Theodore Dupee, Mrs. John T. White and Mrs. Clarence T. Parsons.

SOME ARE OPPOSED.

SOME ARE OPPOSED,

There are rumors in the air of some opposition to the scheme of changing the name of Vine and a part of Appleton street, at Arlington Heights, to that of Paul Revere road. While the opposition is not organized it is felt in certain quarters as there are those who desire to see Appleton street remain intact. This street was named in honor of Rev. Nathaniel Appleton, who came from Boston nearly 100 years ago to Arlington Heights where he bought about 300 acres of land. He built the first house in that section and lived there a part of the time. The reasons alleged to be for opposing the proposed change are two in number. The first is because it is suggested that the changing of the name would be disrespectful to the memory of the first settler at the Heights, and second that the people who have been in that neighborhood for many years are attached to the name and its associations. These views are perhaps entertained by the older residents than by others although the sisted that some of those who signed the petition asking for the change will vote against the project when it is brought up at the town meeting. I may he said, however, for the proposed change that but a small part of Appleton street is to be renamed according to the plan, simply that section which is between Massachusetts and Park avenues, leaving the greater part of Appleton street unchanged in name. nues, leaving the greater part of Appleton street unchanged in name.

Editor Enterprise:—Appleton street, Vine street, or Paul Revere road—whichever it is called officially—it will be more than one generation before the people of Arlington forget to call it by its present name.

AN UNUSUAL WARRANT.

Arlington Voters May Decide to Elect Town Clerk for Three Year Term.

Town Clerk for Three tear letil.

There are 20 articles in the warrant for the Arlington town meeting Tuesday, although it is unlikely that any business will be transacted except the annual casting of ballots for state officers. The meeting will then adjourn for one or two weeks to act upon the more local matters. The proposition for a three years term for the town elerk, which was made allowable under the statutes of this year, will be before the meeting, and the articles relative to the financial affairs of the town, besides other articles of lesser though considerable importance. In the warrant are the following articles:

RUNAWAY COLLISION.

RUNAWAY COLLISION.

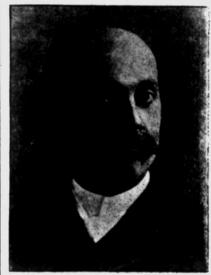

A collision at the corner of Pleasant and Brighton streets, in Belmont, near the Arlington line, last evening, resulted in injuries to several persons, besides damaging two vehicles. The injured are Mrs. J. Burrows, Mrs. F. ... Burrows, Mrs. J. W. Meff and Miss Marion Meff, of West Somerville, and four Italian women, names unknown. One of the latter had a shoulder dislocated; Mrs. F. M. Burrows was badly bruised; Mrs. F. M. Burrows was injured about her face and mouth, while all were injured, more or less. The wagon containing the Italian women is owned by Wyman Bros., of Arlington. A driver was on the front seat, but when the horse became frightened could not check him. The wagon overturned and the horse dragged it for some distance, striking the Somerville team and spilling the occupants.

Services appropriate to All Saints' day were held at St Agnes's church, yester-day morning. Masses were celebrated at 5.30 and 8 o'clock, and were attended by large congregations. There was a ves-per service in the evening.

UNITED WORKMEN.

The uncertainty of human life and lans and methods for the provision for plans and methods for the provision for and protection to those dependent upon them and their fellows when they have passed from this earthly sphere to the great beyond was the underlying motive that actuated the members of Circle lodge. Ancient Order of United Workmen, to invite their fellow-men, not members of the order, to attend the social meeting of the lodge in G. A. R. hall in Arlington, last evening.

While this meeting was primarily intended as an official visitation of the grand master workman and district supervisor to explain the new system of classified assessments recently adopted at the grand lodge session, it was decided to make it a semi-public meeting and invite those who might desire to avail themselves of the protection and fraternity of the order, and by way of divertisment a musical entertainment and cigars and a repast were provided. The weather was so unfavorable that the attendance was not all that could be desired. However, a goodly number was present and attentively listened to the addresses upon the features of the order. Master Workman W. H. Thorpe presided. The speakers were District Deputy F. H. Slick, of Waltham, District Supervisor J. J. Reedy, of Cambridge, and Grand Master Workman O. A. Ward, of Boston, Following the speaking, a little personal solicitation elicited an application from every person present not a member. During the supper which followed in the banquet room below, N. J. Hardy entertained the gathering with several selections on the Victor graphophone, after which a short talk was listened to by P. M. W. Clarke, of Newton, former deputy of Circle lodge. The meeting closed after a short but highly interesting talk upon Cuba by H. W. Berthrong, late collector of customs, port of Havana. Among those present were several members from Newton and Waltham.

The history, principles and objects of the order should not be an unfamiliar subject to a single man, woman or child in the land, but nevertheless it is a fact there are many who know absolutely nothing about it and the great and good work it has accomplished. It is the oldest and largest fraternal beneficiary society in the United States, and is the pioneer of the system of mutual protection which has, after 30 years of unexampled property, attained such vast proportions that it stands today the largest and strongest of the hundreds of similar orders which are pouring thousands of dollars annually into the laps of unexampled property, attained such vast proportions that it stands today the largest and strongest of the hundreds of similar orders which are pouring thousands of dollars annually into the laps of unexampled property, attained such vast proportions that it stands today the largest and strongest of the hond shows and other entertainments. The so-cial feature of the lodge is very strong, as well as the generosity as shown be several instances of help to members. There has been a steady growth in its membership, at present being over 100, The mortality of the lodge has been re-markable, there having been but three deaths since its organization.

Among the prominent members of the lodge are Past Masters W. J. McAllister, W. H. Berthrong, George A. Lloyd, Wm. E. Lloyd, Geo. C. Tewksbury, W. D. McKenzie, W. J. Freethy, C. T. Parsons and E. P. White.

Much of the success of this affair is due to the efforts of Master Workman W. H. Thorpe, of 30 Russell street. Mr. Thorpe joined the order in 1883, becoming a member of Somerville lodge, where he held nearly every office. He withdrew from there and joined Circle lodge he held nearly every office. The young folks of the Unitarian Sunday school had a jolly time in the parlors of the church. Wednesday evening, in celebrating Hallowe'en eve. Sheets and pillow slips were in demand, for a feature was to conceal one's identity in sheet and pillow slip, and then to guess the boy or girl from eye or nose. Much amusement was afforded by vain attempts to get a bite of the swinging apple or doughnut, and so on throughout the usual list of good things to eat. Hallowe'en comes down to us from Scotland, and its observance comes largely from sentiment. Formerly Hallowe'en was celebrated by each household lighting at night-time a big bonfire. It has been supposed that the fairies were unusually propitious on Hallowe'en. And now it has become a fact, so the boys think, that the fairies on this eve of poetry and romance, are peculiarly willing and winning. poetry and romance, are peculiarly will-ing and winning.

"Lovers' Lane," at the Park theatre, has captured Boston just as it previously captured Chicago, New York and other great cities, its reception, last Monday and the many choice of Annual Company and the state of the state ly captured Chicago, New York and other great cities. Its reception, last Monday night, was nothing short of an absolute triumph. William A. Brady has introduced many notable successes to Boston but none more emphatic in every sense than this delightful Clyde Fitch play of New England village life. Fitch is the most popular and prolific play-wright in America nowadays, and "Lovers' Lane," with its sweetness, beauty, rustic charm, roaring comedy, and deft touches of pathos may be recorded as his master triumph. One moment ne tugs at the heartstrings of an audience, and the next inspires it to a tumult of merriment. A Boston first night audience seldom exhibits such spontaneous and sweeping enthusiasm as that evoked by "Lovers' Lane." There was curtain call after curtain call, and the excellent players were given individual ovations motably Ernest Hastings, as the young village clergyman; Blanche Hall, a most delightful ingenue, as his sweetheart; and Millie James, a young woman out of her teens, who plays a naughty little girl of eleven with such wonderful fidelity as to make it impossible to believe that she is not herself a child. Of the thirty speaking parts every one is a character bit perfectly cast. The success of "Lovers' Lane" emphasizes the public demand for thoroughly clean entertainment. In this play is demonstrated that an entertainment may be unroariously funny, and at the same time devoid of offence. Such a play appeals alike to society, the family element and the blase seeker after amusement. "Lovers' Lane" delights every ment and the blase seeker after amuse-ment. "Lovers' Lane" delights every-body and offends no one. Its success may be set down as absolutely unequi-

He told in a most entertaining and graphic manner something of the country, the people, their habits and customs, and of the work being done by the missionaries for the enlightenment of this benighted people. This is not Mr. Steadman's first visit to this section, and those present last Sunday evening, who heard him just previous to his departure for his chosen field of labor were pleased to note the same intense enthusiasm and the same firm determination and strong faith of this noble young man. His six years of work in the foreign field have only served to intensify that old-time enthusiasm and determination, and he is looking eagerly forward to the time when he and his wife may return to their chosen work. Mr. Steadman sang two familiar hymns in the Korean language, which proved to be a very pleasing feature. The Endeavorers' Mizpah benediction closed the first union service of these two societies, and let us hope that many more will follow.
